FRANCE WARNS KAISER

PARIS, Aug. 23.—That France is really facing the possibility of a great war with Germany became known officially to-day, following the publication of the ultimatum sent to Germany after yesterday's cabinet meeting.

This ultimatum expressing France's final stand on the Moroccan dispute states that a satisfactory settlement of the present deadlock will only be arrived at under two conditions, as follows:

First: France's rights in Morocco to be so defined that the question will be finally settled without fear of any further controversy.

Second: Germany shall reduce her claims regarding extension of her territory on the Congo, claims which are still obviously excessive.

Paris has become excited over the prospect of a great war. A change has come over the political atmosphere here in the last two days, and the air seems charged with electricity.

A semi-official communication, purporting to reflect the feeling in political circles after the special Cabinet meeting, seems to accord perfectly with the general feeling of the nation on the subject.

Although very diplomatically worded and drawn up in bland and unprovocative style, it ends with a firm statement sounding very nearly like an ultimatum.

It states that a satisfactory settlement of the present deadlock will only be arrived at under two conditions.

The first is that France's rights in Morocco be so defined that the question will be finally settled without fear of any further controversy.

The second, Germany shall reduce her claims regarding extension of her territory on the Congo, claims which are still obviously excessive.

The great public is in a state of nervous suspense, which was heightened to-day yesterday by the persistent rumor that war may be inevitable.

The secrecy surrounding the whole of the Franco-German conversations is regarded as ominous and it is felt on all sides that the country was never nearer war.

To-day the news that the great army maneuvres of September are to be curtailed, one corps taking part instead of two, on account of the foot and mouth disease now prevalent among French cattle, is regarded as highly significant.

The French public is even more sceptical of the pretext offered by the English government of water shortage for the total abolition of manoeuvres this year.

Both causes are considered mere excuses to hide the fact that both armies are being kept ready for instant action.

Throughout the country the addresses of deputies and senators at the general councils of the various departments have been read with the greatest interest.

All sound a note of the extreme gravity of the situation and the necessity for firmness.

A similar standpoint is taken by the press; only its tone is still more emphatic.

All the newspapers, including the most serious, declare the country does not intend to stand the continual annoyances and hindrances from Germany, and that it is time her claims as to the colonies were settled once for all.

This attitude of the press and the political leaders is thoroughly endorsed by the Paris public; but over the capital broods a haze of impending suspense.

Nothing at all is known regarding what passed at the two historic meetings yesterday, first that of the ambassadors of Germany, England and Italy with Foreign Minister De Selves, and then three hours' conference of Jules Cambon with Premier Caillaux.

At the meeting the other two ambassadors and the most influential members of the cabinet were present.

In the political circles the semi-official communique above mentioned is regarded as the French government's last word.

The whole country seems resolute not to undervalue the mortal issues, whatever the cost may be.

The wording of the firm note, which between the lines is a warning to Germany, grew out by the government on the Moroccan situation, is:

"Ambassador Jusserand will return to Berlin toward the end of August, probably about the 28th. Meantime he will have in Paris several conferences with the French Minister of Foreign Affairs and Minister of the Colonies concerning the subjects of his conversations with Herr Von Kiderlen Waechter, the German Minister of Foreign Affairs.

"Without endeavoring to prejudge the precise results, it is believed that the difficulties will find a solution, it is, however, true that such solution will depend upon two conditions: first, that the rights of France in Morocco be recognized without diminution on the part of Germany and regulated definitely in a manner to avoid all future complications; and second, that Germany reduces her territorial decisions in French Congo, which appear to be manifestly excessive."

HOLD 3 AS WHITTIER SLAYERS

Three men of the North End were arrested to-day and were later held in $2,500 bonds on charges of assault and manslaughter, in connection with the attack Saturday night by a gang of six or seven men on Lieutenant William A. Whittier of the U. S. revenue cutter Androscoggin and three companions, which resulted fatally for Lieutenant Whittier.

The men held are Frank Cassassa, twenty-seven years, of Ferry street; Ilhiopgi Balsarotti, twenty-seven years, no address, and John Garibotti of No. 2 Hull street, a cigarmaker.

All three pleaded not guilty and waived examination. They were held for a continued hearing on August 30.

The police have three witnesses so far who say that these men were concerned in the attack on the Whittier party. One of the defendants is declared to be the very man who struck Lieutenant Whittier the fatal blow.

Other Arrests Expected.

Others will doubtless be arrested soon, for the police have obtained clews, some are said to have fled the city as soon as the first arrests were made. The police have no fear but what they can be located when necessary.

While the arrests and court hearing were in progress to-day the funeral of Lieutenant Whittier was being held at his home in North Berwick, Me. A detail of officers from the Androscoggin and other revenue cutters were present.

The sessions of the board of inquiry into Lieutenant Whittier's death, which have been in progress aboard the Androscoggin since Monday, were interrupted to-day on account of the absence of the cutter's officers who attended the funeral.

Captain Daniels of the Androscoggin and all the brother officers of the slain officer throughout the Atlantic coast branch of the revenue service are reiterating their demands that the assailants of the dead lieutenant and his friends be brought to justice speedily.

First Real Story of Attack.

Another feature to-day was the first detailed account of the attack itself. This account comes from Frank A. Gleason, insurance agent, and one of the three men who were with Lieutenant Whittier in the North End the night of the attack. Mr. Gleason holds his party absolutely blameless for what occurred.

It was reported to-day, also, that the police would seek a second autopsy upon the body of Lieutenant Whittier to determine whether the death resulted from a blow on the head from one of the assailants or from his head striking the pavement when he fell.

Assistant Medical Examiner Watters found, in the first autopsy, a bruise cut on the left side of the head, just above the ear. Death was due to "epidural hemorrhage with compression of the brain." It was probably caused by a blow on the head with some blunt instrument. Dr. Watters, if a second autopsy is deemed necessary, arrangements will have to be made to exhume the body, which was interred at North Berwick this afternoon.

Men Are Identified.

After four days of investigation the police developed results to-day when they arrested, soon after midnight, Cassassa and Balsarotti. They were not taken on warrants, but on suspicion. Cassassa had been taken to the Hanover street police station before. He was one of the three men brought there Monday night and released because none of the victims of the assault could identify him.

After being Cassassa and Balsarotti in a cell the police hurried to round up some witnesses on whom, obviously, they could bring the two men into court. They secured three men who could identify the pair and that both Balsarotti and Cassassa were concerned in the fatal assault was made at Hanover street. Then the three witnesses were taken to headquarters, where they were questioned at length by Deputy Watts and Inspectors Rooney and McCauley. At the same conference were Sergeant Murphy and Special Officer MacDonald, who had worked on the case.

As result of what these witnesses said Sergeant Murphy and Special Officer MacDonald applied for warrants for the formal arrest of Cassassa and Balsarotti, who were held up to that time on suspicion. These warrants were issued to-day and charged manslaughter in connection with the death of Lieutenant Whittier. Cassassa and Balsarotti were brought up from Hanover street to headquarters at 10:30. They were questioned at length.

As a result of what the police learned anew, either from the three witnesses or from Cassassa and Balsarotti, a warrant was asked and was granted for the arrest of Garabotti, the third man taken into custody to-day.

Garabotti was arrested at noon and was taken to headquarters first. There he, with Cassassa and Balsarotti, was

ADAMS YACHT IS AGAIN A WINNER

Charles Francis Adams won again to-day with his yacht Harpoon in the second day's racing for the Quincy challenge cup. The time was 1 hour 27 minutes 2 seconds.

"Charlie" Adams being one of Quincy's own, and the Harpoon being one of the Quincy Yacht Club fleet, Quincy is naturally delighted. Another victory in this series will give Quincy the cup for another year.

The Ellen, of the Boston Yacht Club, with former Police Commissioner Charles F. Curtis as skipper, was second, with time of 1:29:55; the Seal, of the Eastern Yacht Club, Marblehead, Skipper Herbert M. Sears, third, time 1:31:50. The Resolute, of the Corinthian Yacht Club, Marblehead, sailed in seventeen yar olds C. A. Wood, withdrew after the first round with a smashed mast. She was third when she was withdrawn.

To-day's racing started at 11:40 a. m. in a brisk southeasterly breeze. Some 'vonsible was experienced in laying out a course in which the yachts would have sufficient water. A triangular course was selected, two miles to the leg, the racers covering the course twice. The first leg was a spinnaker run, the second leg a reach and the last a beat.

The Harpoon had a good position on the starting line when the gun was fired and got away first. The challengers got away in the following order:

Beatrice, C. A. Wood, Corinthian Yacht Club; Seal, H. M. Sears, Eastern Yacht Club; Ellen, C. F. Curtis, Boston Yacht Club.

The Ellen got a bad start and the other yachts were well on their way to the first turning point when she got over the line. At 11:30 she had closed up on the three challengers but the defender, the Harpoon, was still holding her lead and sailing a fast race.

The first turn was made at the Quincy Yacht Club buoy, the first turn was at the buoy off Dumbles Island and the second at the buoy off the government wharf at Peddock's Island.

NANTUCKET STOPS SUNDAY BASEBALL

NANTUCKET, Aug. 23.—There will be no baseball played on this island on Sunday because of the crusade started by Nantucket clergy. Action under the law is threatened if prominent Summer residents use bat and ball on the Sabbath. Sunday ball playing has been a popular sport for years. Clergymen say the games draw young people away from church.

ADVICE OF JUDGE MUST BE ACCEPTED

"I was advised by my family physician to drink as to build up my health," said John M. McGilvary of No 123 Hampshire street, Cambridge, when he appeared before Judge Almy to-day on a charge of intoxication. McGilvary was on probation for a similar offence. "You took the doctor's advice instead of the court's, did you?" asked Judge Almy. "I'll have to send you away for four months."

STONEMAN GETS HEARING TO-DAY

Attorney David Stoneman, named for associate justice of the Dorchester District Court by Governor Foss, and against whose confirmation Attorney David Mac-covitz of Ward 8 made a fight by preferring charges, was given a hearing in his own behalf by the Governor's Council to-day.

Prominent politicians, attorneys and business men appeared to testify in Stoneman's favor. Among them were former Governor John L. Bates and Sherman L. Whipple.

Stoneman denied every accusation by his foes. The case against him was heard yesterday. To-day, before the hearing was begun, one Councillor said nothing had been offered yesterday by witnesses to prove the charges.

One charge is that Stoneman loaned money as a "side line" and charged an exorbitant rate of interest.

Two Charges Not Revealed.

Another charge is that a prominent Democratic politician was connected with a note for $2,500. It is claimed that a politician used his influence with Governor Foss to get Stoneman named for associate justice over three other candidates. Another charge is that Stoneman maladministered an estate. What charges four and five are has not been learned.

The hearing by the council was private and presided over by Lieutenant-Governor Frothingham. It opened at 9:30 o'clock, with a police officer guarding the door. The first persons called into the chamber were Stoneman, Attorney Frank Nay, his counsel; Attorney Mahowitz and Attorney Solomon Lowenberg, the accusers named. They all entered the chamber together.

Governor Bates Called.

Stoneman was called as the first witness. He denied every charge and said the accusations against him were inspired by jealousy because he got the appointment. Governor Bates was witness in his behalf. Were waiting outside to be heard. They included Lowenberg, the accusers named. All had been before the council and left the chamber, he made the following statement:

"I told what I knew about Mr Stoneman's reputation as a lawyer and as to the best of my knowledge it is a good one."

Among others who appeared to testify in Stoneman's behalf were Melvin O. Adams, John K. McVey, former Assistant District Attorney Joseph Stone, former Judge George L. Barnes, Frank Allen, James H. Vahey, former District Attorney Asa Wing, United States District Attorney Guy Bullen, Nelson Judge Brown of the East Boston court and Former Assistant District Attorney Sughrue.

The candidate for the appointment Stoneman got out at 5. Calen, John B. Marks and H. Murray Pitkfield.

Before the Council convened until Tuesday next, when the rest of the witnesses will be heard. If the hearing is finished on that day action on the Stoneman appointment may be taken on Wednesday.

MAYOR INSPECTS ANNEX DRAWINGS

The plans for the proposed new county City Hall annex on the site of the old Courthouse were inspected by Mayor Fitzgerald and the City Council to-day.

The proposed building will be 125 feet above the sidewalk and will have six stories below ground.

The building has been so designed that if there is a parallel street to Washington and Court square extending from Court square to Temple place, as the Mayor proposes, the annex, consisting of the Court House and thirteen bays of Court square, may be extended to within fifty feet of School street, thus leaving as valuable offices and making a building with total length of 400 feet, with twenty-two bays on Court square. The plans call for building on the old Registry of Deeds site on Court square, thus uniting the present city properties, and leaving a building slightly less than 400 feet in depth, and of floor area about equal to 400,000 square feet, which is considered favorably with the space which the interested municipal authorities of the county are planning for the housing of their offices.

The annex will contain in the neighborhood of 150,000 feet of floor space with 20,000 feet of vault space in the basement and sub-basement, as well as space for the heating apparatus, electric machinery, pumps and dynamos. The annex will be connected with the present city property by a temporary bridge of fireproof construction over the alley in the rear, thus making all the departments easy of access from one old building.

The annex is large in mass, so that in treatment is lengthened and has a distinctly civic character. The elevation suggested is simple.

ATWOOD IS SOUTH OF ALBANY

CASTLETON, N. Y., Aug. 23.—With 1,182 miles of his flight from St. Louis to the sea behind him, Harry N. Atwood, the young Boston aviator, was to-day thousands of miles nearer his goal.

He landed on a hill a mile and a half from here at 9:10 this morning after covering the 70 miles from Troy to Castleton, N. Y., in one hour and forty-eight minutes.

He came down to examine his machine and replenish his gasoline supply, while awaiting the arrival of Lieutenant Frank Lahm, in charge of the balloon corps, who had been ordered by the war department to follow the aviator on the final rush for New York City.

Bearing Is Broken.

His examination showed that one of the bearings of the engine had broken. He decided that it was necessary to repair this before proceeding, and that he would start at that time for Kinderhook, eighteen miles south of New York, remain there over night and complete his flight to-morrow.

During part of his flight this morning Atwood exceeded a speed of sixty miles an hour.

Atwood was forced to land in the town of Ghent, about eighteen miles southwest of Amsterdam, before reaching Albany in consequence of a leaking gasoline tank.

He came down by a gentle sail at local lands, and after having repaired the tank added him in getting the aeroplane to an elevation from which he continued his flight after a short rest.

Atwood said his gasoline had been leaking almost from the start of his morning flight.

All the newspapers of Castleton hurried to the hill one and a half miles from the town where Atwood landed and watched him after with the glasses. The crowd along the morning's flight the aviator said the air was very heavy and made flying trying work.

Stops to Visit Cemetery.

"If it does not clear I shall not start before five o'clock this afternoon he said. While he was here he was going to visit the Castleton cemetery where some of my relatives are buried."

Atwood landed at Troy, one to two miles south of Schenectady at 8:35 a. m. and was past the city by 8:45, following the West Shore tracks. He was flying about 600 feet high and approached the city but rose to 900 feet as he passed around, going about fifty miles an hour.

At 8:45 the Troy and New York Central and other leading Boilermen Junction and passed over Carman at 8:47 a. m. This was the last point of railway and telegraphic communication from his starting point. He had taken to the Municipal Court for arraignment.

She was applauded by the gallery of more than 300 prominent society people. Miss Westinghouse is a daughter of George Westinghouse of Cincinnati.

The three men were jointly charged with manslaughter in connection with the death of Lieutenant Whittier and with assault on George H. Farrell, one of the members of the Whittier party.

Cassesso was represented by Frank Zottoli, bail commissioner. Neither of the other two had counsel. Zottoli said after their examination would establish an alibi that in did not reach the scene of the crime till after the trouble was over.

Bail was fixed at $5,000 each on the manslaughter charge and at $500 each on the assault charge, making a total of $5,500 bail. Zottoli said the defendants were making efforts to obtain bail.

As soon as they secured the services of the police said they would ask for summonses to secure the presence in court of the other three men who were with Lieutenant Whittier when he was attacked. Atwood in St. Louis to Sea Flight

Of all aviators now flying, Atwood, though the least of the most sensational flights, is the most unperturbed and calm when on the wing. At the conclusion of his flight from St. Louis to Boston, in which he is now engaged, the famous airman will try for the William R. Hearst prize of $50,000 for a coast to coast flight.

Atwood's start was made from Nelles' tent, a hamlet opposite Fort Plain on the Mohawk River. He started off toward an early start before the sun's rays became too hot. Fort Plain turned out en masse to see the young aviator a noisy send-off which many farmers from the near country who had driven in at dawn joined in.

Atwood was up early and decided to get

I thought Lieutenant Whittier had struck me. I saw Lieutenant Whittier falling to the ground. I felt that I did not see his hand, for I was struck a glancing blow but could not tell what part of the face. Two men came at me at once. One struck me in front and the other and larger than I am.

STATEMENT BY EDITOR DE HAAS

Jacob de Haas, editor of the Jewish Advocate, a Boston publication, was one of the witnesses who appeared yesterday in the State House to testify at the hearing being given by the Governor's Council on charges made against Attorney David Somerstein, who has been appointed state justice of the Dorchester District Court, but has not yet been confirmed.

Witnesses heard yesterday were called by Somerstein's accusers to sustain their claim that he should not have a place on the bench. When Editor de Haas took the stand, Counsel Frederick Lyon Simonds of the Simons Manufacturing Company took him in task for testifying against Somerstein.

De Haas was criticised by Mr. Simonds for banned proceedings in regard to advertising.

Mr. de Haas, who is a well-known citizen, issued the following statement to-day: "The published matter is all untrue. I have never been in bankruptcy, involuntary or otherwise. For proof of this, consult the court records. I have never received money for advertisements, and then failed to publish the advertisement. I was never summoned to appear before the Governor's Council. As a last gilding touch, I went to the hearing and gave my testimony, as I had nothing to conceal. I did not refuse to attached for complying with the law."

Miss Helen F. McGarry, a leader of the clubs, and one of the prettiest girls in Lynn, is to be married to Ollie Chadwick on Wednesday night. It was announced to-day.

Miss McGarry is only twenty-three years of age, and according to the law of the club she should wait seven years yet before thinking of matrimony. But says she, "Although I like the club all right, I like Otis Chadwick better."

Her fellow members, although some what grieved that the rule of the club is to be broken, are inclined to forgive the charming Miss McGarry, and they have promised to attend the wedding in a body.

Miss McGarry is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John J. McGarry of No. 11 Ocean street. Her father is an officer in the Herrick Shoe Company. Mr. Chadwick lives on Elmsmere street, and is engaged in business.

The wedding will take place at St. Joseph's church, with Rev. William Mullen officiating. Mr. Chadwell recently joined the Catholic church at the wish of his fiancée.

REPUBLICANS GO TO "SKIDDOOFEST"

There weren't any Republicans in West to-day—they were all down at the Squantum Inn to see what the great mystery was that Chairman Charles H. Innes planned to unfold at the annual outing of the Republican League. As it was the 23d of the month, the etceteras were called "skiddoofest." Pallbearers found with candidacies about their persons were urged by an energetic committee to vamoose. After the ball game and swimming, everyone was primed for the "question which may change the whole course of State politics."

URGES UNIFORM DIVORCE LAW

The twenty-first annual conference of the Committee on Uniform State Laws opened at the Vendome to-day. President Waitte H. Smith of Philadelphia, in his opening address, reviewed the progress of uniform legislation, with especial reference to negotiable instruments, warehouse receipts acts, bills of lading acts and other measures which the committee is advocating. Among other things he said:

"Recent events make it desirable and appropriate that I should make some reference to a uniform divorce act. So thoroughly is the conscience of the country aroused over the divorce evils that I desire to call attention to the National Divorce Conference in 1906. At this time only three States adopted a uniform divorce law—New Jersey, Delaware and Wisconsin, and this comparative failure was due to two reasons: First, the public conscience was not then aroused as it is now, and second, interested parties were been able to delay the consideration of the measure by asking we must eventually come."

Other measures which will be considered during the week are a uniform child labor act, a uniform workingmen's compensation act and a uniform act relating to foreign wills.

Secretary Meyer Sees English Navy Yards.

LONDON—George von L. Meyer, secretary of the Navy, passed through London from Scotland, on his way to Paris and visited the three shipbuilding yards on the Clyde, it is said.

"One of the conclusions I have come to in my visit to the English yards is that the United States has too many navy yards. England, with a great navy and great naval requirements, has only one-half the number of navy yards that we have. I am confirmed in the belief that it is time to abolish a certain number of navy yards."

MRS. FRENCH MAY FORGIVE ELOPERS

NEWPORT, Aug. 23.—The arrival of Mrs. Amos Tuck French at her home here from Tuxedo is believed by the society colony in Newport to mean something of a welcome and forgiveness to her daughter, Estelle, and her bridegroom, "Handsome Jack" Geraghty. The elopers were married in Newport while a few days from Springfield, where they have been spending their honeymoon, following their flight under the light of the full moon last night.

Mrs. French was accompanied here by Mrs. Frances Ormonde French, grandmother of Mrs. Augustus Post-Geraghty, and by Mrs. Elsie French Vanderbilt, aunt of the elopers bride. The last details of the proposed reconciliation with the elopers are believed to have been reached at a family conference at Tuxedo. Grandmother French soon immediately there upon her arrival from France and Mrs. Elsie French Vanderbilt, believed to have interceded in behalf of her niece.

Newspaper Advertisement Points Way to Health

I can truthfully say that Dr Kilmer's Swamp-Root is a very good medicine, not alone for kidney troubles, but also for weak and sore back, as well as for rheumatism.

About a year ago I became ill and unable to work. I had pain in my side and back. I read of Swamp-Root in the newspaper and in an almanac. Believing it would do me good, I went to my druggist, Mr. Skinner, and purchased a bottle. Finding relief in one fifty-cent bottle, I purchased several more and in a short time was able to continue with my work and am to-day feeling well and strong. I always recommend Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root to my friends as I believe it is as good a medicine as can be found. AUGUST D. SMITH,

DENOUNCE BROKER ON BEAUTY HUNT ABROAD

NEW YORK, Aug. 22.—Alfred H. Hisse, a broker, is going to Europe to annul for a wife because he says he can't find in America a girl pretty enough to suit him. His statement has provoked a storm of criticism from art critics and artists, who say that American girls lead the world in beauty as well as in intellect.

Mr. Hisse demands in his bride the following qualifications:

Five feet eight inches in height, weight 130 pounds, a brunette with raven hair, a willowy figure and perfect teeth.

The quest of Europe for a prettier girl than can be found in this country is regarded as extraordinary when it is considered how much European men admire the American girls.

The prettiest women in London and Paris are acknowledged there to be Yankees. It is said by artists that every type of feminine beauty is to be found in this country, and that you cannot go into a store, walk streets, travel in train or dine at hotel without seeing so many girls who would make Cleopatra look plain, that the perplexity of the American man is not to find good-looking women, but to make a choice.

When Artist Will Foster, who makes a specialty of sketching pretty girls, was asked for views of Broker Hisse's quest, he said:

"New York takes the palm from all the world for the high quality of its feminine beauty. Here you may walk through the lower East Side and see types like those that have roused kings and emperors to fight one another.

"You may walk along Fifth avenue and see scores of 'doubles' of Helen of Troy, whose beauty certainly did cause some rejection in her day.

"If these types pall upon you, go over to Broadway.

"But perhaps the pastoral type would gain call to you from afar. In that event go to Yonkers, to Jersey, to Long Island, and there they are.

"In New York today we have hundreds of Cleopatras. Give them a moonlight night and a barge, and your entrancement would be complete. Come to think of it, I believe a large number of our New York girls are more captivating than Cleopatra ever thought of being.

"The American girls have more than their share of beauty, intelligence, tact. And they don't wear sandals and rub a bit of ointment on their arms and faces excepting, of course, citronella, when the mosquitoes are in evidence."

SENTIMENT NOW FAVORS BEATTIE

CHESTERFIELD COUNTY COURT HOUSE, Va., Aug. 22.—A perceptible change in sentiment was noticeable here today when the trial of Henry Clay Beattie, Jr., charged with the murder of his wife, Louise Owen Beattie, was resumed. Up to and on Monday, when Beattie was arraigned and pleaded not guilty to the murder charge, feeling appeared to be almost unanimous that the twenty-six-year-old defendant had shot his wife to death on the Midlothian turnpike as the Commonwealth of Virginia charged.

During the intermission, since court adjourned Monday afternoon until today, to provide an extra panel of talesmen from which to pick the four jurors needed, for no clearly defined reason, expressions were heard on all sides that a "hung jury" would be the result of the trial, while not a few expressed their conviction that the result of the case would be the freedom of Henry and the incarceration of Paul Beattie, his cousin, in a State institution for insane criminals. Of course, all this was conjecture.

It was expected by both sides before court convened that the sixteen regular jurors would be secured this afternoon and the four eliminations permitted to the defense by peremptory challenge, bringing the actual trial jury down to the legal number of twelve, would be made before adjournment.

Interest today continued to centre in the possible attitude of Beulah Binford, the pretty seventeen-year-old woman in the case, on the stand. Although called by the State and depended upon by it to furnish many of the most damaging links to the chain of evidence against Beattie, conviction was freely expressed today that she would turn on the stand and do all in her power to free the man who for love of her is facing the death chair. She will not be brought from her cell in the Henrico County jail in Richmond before to-morrow at the earliest, and meantime she is being jealously shielded against outside influence action by the authorities.

Paul Beattie also is being held in a cell near that of Beulah.

If Henry Beattie really killed his wife, as is charged by Chesterfield County, and if his motive was love for Beulah Binford, a beautiful girl of another class, he made a colossally repentant youth.

For Beulah Binford has deserted him. She cut away from him entirely in a frank, voluntary statement she said she did not love Beattie any longer, that she would be afraid, right now, after hearing the accusations against him, to remain alone with him in the quarter of an hour's end, finally, that if he should be acquitted by a jury sent to try him in Chesterfield County she never again would look at him or speak to him.

MRS. GERAGHTY'S WEDDING STORY

The AMERICAN to-day publishes another chapter of the wonderful life story of Mrs. Julia French Geraghty. Mrs. Geraghty relinquishes her love for her young husband and her determination not to be parted from him.—She relates with girlish enthusiasm her enjoyment of a simple home life with "Jack's" relatives in Springfield, in contrast to the artificial formality of her former society career. She also deals earnestly with that much discussed marriage and her reasons for it.

MRS. GERAGHTY'S LIFE STORY.
By JULIA FRENCH GERAGHTY.

CHAPTER VI.
Love in a Cottage.

Now that the excitement is all over and we are settled down here in Springfield for our honeymoon, I can't even yet realize that I am a staid old married woman. I've loved Jack for so long and there were so many obstacles in the way, that it doesn't seem possible that it's really true that we are married for good and all, and that nothing can separate us.

I am the happiest girl in the world, and there's nothing more I could wish for except that my family would send us word that it was all right. Of course, the only grounds on which there can be an objection standing will be for them to accept Jack too, because I am his wife. His friends are my friends, and my friends must be his friends or I won't recognize them.

I am in love with Springfield. It is a beautiful place, and Jack's cousins, who are entertaining us, live in a house on one of the nicest parts of the town. The Harrises have all been perfectly lovely to us ever since we arrived so unexpectedly, especially considering that we were not even invited. And we have been a great deal of trouble to them, always late for meals, and sometimes not coming home at all when we said we would.

The telephone and the door bell have rung steadily from 8 o'clock in the morning until midnight, and it has kept some member of the family busy every minute telling reporters and photographers that we were not in, or else that we would not see them.

Great Fun With the Reporters.

It's fun to watch the way different reporters try to see us. Jack and I sat in an upstairs window at first and watched them until it got to be an old story. Each woman came up the street, looking scared to death, and laughed in a timid voice, "Can I see Mrs. Geraghty?" When Mrs. Harris said no, that I was not seeing any reporters, she just turned and bolted down the street as fast as she could, without another word, as though she thought some thing was going to catch her.

Another woman who was cleverer at it, was here with a long story about knowing my sister Pauline and all the family, and having just come down from Newport. She wasn't supposed to be a reporter at all, but when it came to giving any definite news about the family's attitude toward me, she was not able to do so.

We have had no real visit here so far. We went to the theatre one night, and to a popular resort another night where there was dancing. I love to dance, and especially as an informal place like that. I was did late those formal, stiff Newport balls, when you have programme and cotillions and no end of red tape.

Better Than Formal Events.

I just enjoyed myself thoroughly the other night. It was so free and easy in contrast. Jack knew a lot of people, and they would come up and ask me to dance, and it was ever so much nicer than more formal affairs. Then we have gone automobiling several times since we were here, and of course I have had to do some shopping.

I hate to buy anything, because I have such stacks and stacks of clothes at home, and I can't help hoping that I am going to get those things. But packing a suit case for a trip is a dif erent matter. I realize that there should be some things missing.

Monday I went with Jack to his church. It was so very different from the Episcopal church to which I was brought up. They have a good deal the same sort of ritual. I was very glad to have the second marriage ceremony performed by a priest of Jack's church, because it made one more stage more binding in the eyes of Jack's family, and of course I want them to consider me their really, truly daughter, for good and all.

(To Be Concluded To-morrow.)

ASTOR PLANNING MYSTERY CRUISE

NEW YORK, Aug. 23.—The report was current today that Colonel John Jacob Astor's yacht Nourmahal was being fitted for a cruise among the Connecticut coast and that Miss Madeleine Force, her parents and Rev. Peter Stickney Grant would accompany the party and that a marriage ceremony would be performed, after which the bridal couple would go to France for the honeymoon.

When asked if he had consented to perform the marriage ceremony, Mr. Grant said:

"Impossible. Read the news of the State of New York."

Miss Force's health has been greatly improved by her cruise to the north. With Colonel Astor, Miss Force and her parents went to Long Beach, where they dined in the grill room of the Hotel Nassau. They had hardly entered the place before it was noised about that Colonel Astor and his prospective wife were present. The grill room was filled with notables. Baron Austen was giving a dinner to Mr. and Mrs. H. Walter Webb. Others present were Commodore Curtiss James of the New York Yacht Club, Mrs. William C. Rockefeller, Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Nelson and George Murray.

When asked if Colonel Astor when the marriage ceremony would take place he said: "Don't know; no one knows."

"But the public wants to know," persisted the reporter.

"Don't annoy me," was the answer for the second time.

ATLANTIC CITY BARS BOLD BATHING SUITS

ATLANTIC CITY, Aug. 23.—The lid is on. Acting Mayor Carmany in the absence of Mayor Stoy, on the scene of the bathing suit scandal, has declared that wearers of undraped bathing suits, garments that look like nightgowns, will have to wear a raincoat or wrap to shield the short-skirted, sleeveless bathing suit while walking to and from the ocean.

HOW TO DESTROY THE DANDRUFF GERM
BY A SPECIALIST

That the dandruff germ is responsible for nearly all the diseases to which the scalp is heir, as well as for baldness and premature gray hair, is a well known fact, but when we realize that it is also indirectly responsible for many of the worst cases of catarrh and consumption, we appreciate the importance of any agent that will destroy its power. We, therefore, particularly pleased to give herewith the prescription which an eminent specialist has used in his private and repeated tests, to completely destroy the dandruff germ in from one to three applications. It will also almost immediately stop falling hair, and it has in numerous cases produced a new hair-growth after years of baldness. This prescription can be made up at home, or any druggist will put it up for you. It comprises Bay Rum, 2 ounces; Lavoria de Campagne, one-half ounce; Menthol Crystals, 40x thoroughly, and after shaking, half an ounce of Glycerine. Apply night and morning, rubbing into the scalp with the finger tips. Those who are bald or have but a beginning of it, Kaine Parfume which makes perfectly safe and clear directions. While this preparation is not a hair restorer, it will destroy the germ which causes dandruff.

CAUTION—Do not apply to face nor is not desired and be sure to avoid tender conjunctiva. Persons with sensitive scalps should first apply a little to the forearm to see if it irritates the skin. Druggists from whom we purchase state that the base used in many cases for this purpose, was tried and satisfactory in every case.

ANTI-JEWISH RIOT IN WALES

LONDON, Aug. 23.—Just as the government succeeded in dispelling the clouds in the labor situation, a new danger to the public peace has set in, as a result of the railroad and shipping strikes, and to-day Great Britain faces the problem of putting down the anti-Jewish riots which have broken out in Southern Wales.

Cardiff, Wales, passed a night of terror with constant fighting between soldiers and mobs. It was not until early to-day, when cavalry, with drawn swords, charged through the streets, riding down the rioters, that the mobs were dispersed. Scores were hurt.

Armed soldiers were thrown into Welsh towns of Ebbigger, Ebbe vale and Rhymney, where Jewish shops had been looted, residences broken into and Jewish residents insulted.

The worst rioting has taken place at Tredegar which is a considerable night's railway ride today. Mob violence increased there in such an extent that soldiers had to resort to the bayonet. Scores were hurt in the fighting and the damage to property will amount to hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Home Secretary Winston Churchill personally is to protect the lives and interests of Jewish subjects and with the impetuosity which characterizes many of his actions has shed strong determination of those under him into the danger zones to restore these already on hand.

Influential Jewish residents of Ebbe vale and Rhymney have forwarded protests to the home office and to them protests have been made against the use of the soldiers which has prevailed there. In both places the mobs overrule the police, and it was not until the police were reinforced with arms that the present night fighting still began.

The nationwide disturbance situation in London was unchanged. Both sides were rebuilding their forces, although President Burton of the Board of Trade said that he hoped for a settlement before the situation could become serious.

JOHN F. CRONIN SEEKS COURT CLERKSHIP

John F. Cronin of Ward 23 has filed with the secretary of State a certified list of names sufficient to place his name on the official ballot as a candidate for the office of clerk of the Supreme Judicial Court for Suffolk county. Cronin is a candidate for this office against Walter F. Downey, who has been appointed by Governor Foss to the temporary incumbency. He has been assured support of the Democratic leaders to the county.

CRANBERRY BOGS ALL FILLED WITH LITTLE RED JOYS

Reports from 137 cranberry bogs received at the annual meeting of the Cape Cod Cranberry Growers' Association, indicate a crop of upwards of 12,600 barrels this year. This will be a gain of 11 per cent. over last year. The gain is due to an increase in the acreage.

A change in the method and time of sending out the frost forecasts was suggested by Professor H. J. Franklin, who is in charge of the state experimental station at East Wareham. He favored the building of weather stations at various points in the cranberry district from which signals might be displayed late in the day.

CHAMBER PARTY HAS NEW IDEAS

Members of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, back from a tour of 15,000 miles seeking new ideas in civic affairs and trade with Europe, declared they had in spite of all they had earned while away, Boston was a mighty fine place to live and do business in and that at no time during their long journey were they in the least ashamed of their native city.

The feature of the public improvements under way at the trade centres visited which impressed the tourists was that bel talents were planned on a scale that looked into the future for from fifty to 100 years. The retired business men were found to take as great an interest in their home city as the active leaders in trade. There was no objection to paying high taxes if the money went into improvements that would put the city ahead of its rivals or improve the living conditions of the inhabitants.

One of the tourists declared to F. J. Mclsaac, the special representative of the AMERICAN, who makes the entire trip and sent interesting reports of it to the Sunday AMERICAN, that he would not take a round the great cities abroad for less of the tour log $10,000.

The spirit aroused by the visit of all the Boston men. The four of European cities visited covered nearly 40,000 days, was the first of its kind ever undertaken, and the effect of it on business men felt ample good for the expenditure of time and money.

Results of Big Trip.

Among the results of the trip were:

Personal invitations to foreign business men to come to Boston in 1912 for the International Congress of Chambers of Commerce.

Establishment of better trade relations with European ports.

Knowledge that American-made goods are wanted by the people of Europe, especially ready-made clothing and boots and shoes.

Knowledge of necessity for a change in the method of giving credit on exports.

Exchange of credit reports on European business men.

Study of docks, rivers, street railways, bridges, city planning, city government and municipal European cities.

In the different cities the visitors were accorded every consideration by the local business organizations, and the party divided into groups in accordance with the business of their own particular fancy. It is the purpose of the various committees and sub-committees to write their opinions and observations for an official publication of the Chamber of Commerce to be presented to the public. This will probably not be ready for a month.

Of course the members learned of the passage of the $10,000,000 appropriation by the Legislature for improvement of Boston's outer front, and all expressed themselves as being highly gratified. Although no concrete plan for the betterment of Boston had apparently been formulated to-day nearly everyone had ideas from what was seen abroad.

James A. McKibben, secretary of the Chamber, gave out the following statement:

"In each city visited, the delegation tendered to the local commercial organizations and to the city authorities an invitation to attend the meeting of the Fifth International Congress of Chambers of Commerce in Boston, the 25th of September next year. The cordial manner in which the invitation was received and the enthusiasm which they displayed in promising to send delegates was most gratifying.

Impressions of Tour.

"One thing which impressed us was the universality with which business men, of the widest experience, men such as are at the head of our largest business enterprises, take part in the conduct of city affairs in Europe, and the extent to which the interest of the business man and the public in general are promoted by governmental action.

"The business men seem to treat city business as they do their private business, and approve of the early subdivision of even high tax rate, if that be necessary to make the city more attractive, healthful and comfortable as a place to live in, and a more convenient and profitable place in which to do business.

"The instance of this is the remarkable manner in which those cities which have water fronts have developed them into splendid harbor and shipping facilities. Being business men, they believe that it is not such the business of the government to provide adequate shipping facilities as it is to provide adequate and suitable streets and avenues.

"They are providing these facilities in the face of obstacles which to us would seem insurmountable. Brussels is not on the sea, but it is digging a canal to the sea, as Manchester in England has done. So make the city an ocean port. Paris, fort, with a population of 250,000, is spending $15,000,000 in dock and harbor development. In other cities it is the same story.

"They do not sit down and wait for commerce to come to them, and then talk about building docks. They build docks and then go after commerce—and get it.

"And they are not content with taking care of the present. They are planning to provide for the facilities needed in the next fifty and one hundred years. In this connection a new art, known as the city planning, has come into existence. In Germany it has become a recognized expert profession, and no city of any size is without an official plan, by which every one must conform.

FRANCE HUNTS LOST PAINTING

PARIS, Aug. 23.—Prefect Lepine to-day assigned sixty of his men, the most highly trained detectives in all France, to find the $5,000,000 masterpiece of Leonardo da Vinci, "Mona Lisa." The theft of this famous painting from the Louvre has aroused all France.

"There is a possibility," said Prefect Lepine, one of the most noted detectives in the world, to-day, "that the painting was stolen by a maniac. We expect to get a trace of the thieves—for I am convinced that more than one man and a part in the mystery—before long.

"I hardly think the motive for the theft was a political one, although there is a possibility 'Mona Lisa' was stolen by persons who hope to make a profit by blackmailing the government. There is little ground for the belief that it is a case of 'sabotage' brought about by discontent among employes at the Louvre. A search of the Louvre has proved that it is not hidden there."

Following several theories, among them one that theft had been committed by an agent of a rich American art collector, the search is on to-day in the most systematic manner.

Customs authorities at all French ports and at all frontier railroad stations were ordered to make strict search, not only of the baggage but of the persons of all travelers leaving France.

The first searches for the painting have proved fruitless, the Under Secretary of State for Fine Arts has lodged a charge of theft against a person in connection with the Minister of Justice, who has appointed a magistrate to carry on the secret investigation. The Under Secretary has also summoned all photographers who have the privileges of the Louvre, and the police are interrogating the curators and their assistants.

Lionardo's Masterpiece.

There is a scaffold against the facade of the Louvre, placed there in connection with the installation of an elevator. By this scaffold it would be easy to enter and leave the building, and a person acquainted with the interior and provided with keys to the various rooms could easily reach the Salon Carre.

"La Gioconda," said Walter Pater in a passage that is regarded by many persons as the finest piece of prose ever written in the English language, just as the picture is believed by many others to be the most beautiful ever painted, "is, in the usual sense, Lionardo's masterpiece, the presiding instance of his mode of thought and work.

"We all know," Pater goes on to say, "the hard hands of the figure, set in the marble chair, in that corpse of fantastic rocks, as in some faint dust under sea. Perhaps of all ancient pictures time has touched it least. She is older than the rocks among which she sits; like the vampire, she has been dead many times, and learned the secrets of the grave; and has been a diver in deep seas, and keeps their fallen day about her; and trafficked for strange webs with Eastern merchants; and, as Leda, was the mother of Helen of Troy, and, as St. Anne, the mother of Mary; and all this has been to her but as the sound of lyres and flutes, and lives only in the delicacy with which it has moulded the changing lineaments, and tinged the eyelids and the hands.

"Mona Lisa" is a portrait of Madonna Lisa del Giocondo of Florence, third wife of Francesco del Giocondo. It was painted in the course of Lionardo's second Florentine period, 1503-6. Soon after the picture was painted it was purchased by King Francis I. of France, who was an ardent admirer of Lionardo's work, and afterward appointed him his court painter. Lionardo died in France in 1519.

Reported Gone Before.

One story was that the police believed the painting had been stolen by a German. Another is that the canvas was taken in the way of a joke, to show the Louvre officials how easy it is to take out treasures from under the their noses. Still another is that the theft was committed for a rich private collector.

In the art world the disappearance of the painting has caused a sensation more than equalling that when the famous Duchess of Galisbonbough was stolen from London several years ago. "Pat" Sheedy, now dead, then noted as a New York gambler and "sporting man," was involved in that case.

TAFT WITH VETS AT ROCHESTER

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Aug. 23.—With over 25,000 veterans here, the forty-fifth annual encampment of the G. A. R. has broken all former records for attendance.

President Taft arrived in Rochester at 9 o'clock. He was met at the station by an escort of the Twenty-ninth Infantry, United States regulars, and at once was driven over the line of march of the big parade. His progress through the lines of people on the street was acclaimed with thunderous cheers. The annual parade of the veterans moved at 9:30. The line was so long that only portions of it could be seen over the short route at a time.

The politics of the encampment is beginning to assume a definite shape. The G. A. R. is going through one of the worst storms in its existence in the endeavor to select a commander-in-chief. To-day it looks like a foregone conclusion that Judge Harvey M. Trimble of Illinois will be honored with the office.

John McGray of Washington, the other candidate, has had his chances injured by the letter made public yesterday in which the veterans allege he tried to drag Republican politics into the G. A. R. business. This letter was written to William J. Patterson of Pittsburg, and in it the Washington adjutant asserted that he was the choice of the national administration for the position of commander-in-chief.

President Taft will address the veterans this evening at 7 o'clock.

FOR ITCHING SCALPS DANDRUFF AND DRY, THIN, FALLING HAIR

Cuticura Soap and Ointment Afford a Speedy, Economical and Agreeable Treatment.

To allay itching and irritation of the scalp, prevent dry, thin and falling hair, remove crusts, scales and dandruff, and promote the growth and beauty of the hair of women, the following special treatment has been found most effective.

On retiring, comb the hair out straight all around, then begin at the side and make a parting, gently rubbing Cuticura ointment into the parting with a bit of soft flannel held over the end of the finger. Anoint additional partings about half an inch apart until the whole scalp has been treated, the purpose being to get the ointment on the scalp skin rather than on the hair.*

The next morning, shampoo with Cuticura soap and hot water. Shampoos alone may be used as often as agreeable, but for women's hair once or twice a month is generally sufficient for this special treatment. Men may apply Cuticura ointment as they would a pomade or in any other convenient way, preferably at night, as often as necessary to keep the scalp clean and the hair from falling, but may shampoo lightly with Cuticura soap every morning, when making the toilet.

Notwithstanding that Cuticura soap and ointment are sold by druggists and dealers throughout the world, those wishing to try this treatment may do so without expense by sending to "Cuticura," Dept. U, Boston, for a free sample of each, with 32-p. book on the care and treatment of skin and hair.

*If the hair is thin or falling, or if over-heated or chilled, use Cuticura Ointment sparingly the night before shampooing.

FLYERS GATHER AT SQUANTUM

The world's greatest aviators are assembling at Squantum for the Harvard-Boston meet which opens Saturday. The flyers, who won big prizes at the Chicago meet just closed, arrive to-day. Tom Sopwith and his machine is among them. The work of preparing the great field for the immense crowds is nearly completed. All along the roads leading to Squantum, tents and buildings are springing up, giving the surroundings a real country fair appearance.

The management of the meet has decided to follow the Chicago plan of paying aviators $2 a minute for every minute they are in the air. Thus, without wiring any event on the program an aviator might earn $120 an hour. Working ten hours a day would net the lucky man $1,200. But the flyers are not looking for such small pay when the big prizes of thousands of dollars are to be won.

Scatty Coming to Meet.

George W. Beatty, who made a new world's record for passenger carrying at the Chicago meet, remaining in the air three hours and 42 minutes, is the latest entry. He wired his acceptance to Manager Claflin. He flies a Wright machine.

Grahame-White, looking younger and even more natty than last year, is accompanied by his sister, Miss Beatrice Grahame-White. She resembles her brother, being tall and dark complexioned, with dashing eyes, and is an enthusiastic aeroplaner as is her brother.

"I am jolly glad to get back to America and to fly again in Boston," said Grahame-White. "I am bringing a Nieuport monoplane, probably now at the field, and with its seventy-horsepower Gnome motor, it should defeat the monoplane of similar power, but of the Bleriot type, flown by Sopwith and Brevington. The Grahame-White machine is faster than the Farman among the biplanes and I believe can well give a good account of himself at the meet. It is now on the way across.

"It is good work that Harry Atwood is doing. I notice that he is becoming more and more cautious as time goes on, by stopping his over-city flights and using more sense as to wind conditions. I shall be glad to see him and have a jolly chat with him.

"The great improvement in aviation during the past year is due to the progress made by the aviators, not to more radical, successful construction.

"I cannot see any great improvement from the builder's standpoint. Aside from the Nieuport monoplane, which has retained the element of safety with a maximum increase in speed, and possibly the Bleriot, the forerunner of the future type of aeroplane, the heavily built monoplane, there has been little change for the better. It is in the greater caution, the more cautious flights, that the reasoning mind of the best aviators that progress has been made.

"The real future of the sport, the finest in the world, lies in the education of the aviator. He must learn to use his head, must think clearly and act cautiously. I steadfastly refuse to adopt monoplane tactics, for I want to fly this year and next year and for years after that.

Aviators More Cautious.

"The aeroplane of a decade from now will be a heavy monoplane built with an eye to safety and speed as well. It is in the decreased head resistance that Nieuport has achieved success.

"Some time before Saturday I think I shall go over the course in the cross-country flight which is to be run off on Labor Day. I want to familiarize myself with the territory and see just what sort of places have been chosen for landings.

"I am thoroughly acquainted with the location of the Blue Hill observatory and the water tower on Lawson's Dreamland at Revere, and I believe they are ideal destinations for impromptu cross-country flights as they will afford the spectators every chance to witness a number of machines racing in the air.

Manager Claflin has opened communications with Rene Simon, who drives a Nieuport monoplane, and Harper Quiggly, America's first licensed woman aviator who flies a similar type. A special prize for women fliers is being discussed by the Chairman Glidden of the contest committee announces that arrangements had been completed with the telephone company for a telegraph circuit, to be operated continuously on Labor Day, the day of the great Bleriot-Nieuport cross-country race, connecting the headquarters of the committee with the various "control" points, the State fair grounds at Nashua and Worcester and Narragansett Park, Providence, with stations at Lowell and Ayer. The position of the fliers will be known and bulletined to the spectators at the Aviation Field.

HEIR IS BORN TO MAIDSTONES

LONDON, Aug. 23.—Society men mostly distributed in the country—but keenly interested in the news of the birth of a son and heir to Viscount and Viscountess Maidstone.

It is fourteen months since the heir of the Earl of Winchilsea and Nottingham married Marguerite A. Drexel, universally acknowledged to be the most beautiful girl in London. She made a great number of friends and was genuinely liked and admired.

The baby has been born with a golden spoon in his mouth, and if all goes well—and there is no reason why it shouldn't—he will, one of these days, inherit two earldoms, a viscounty, a barony, a baronetcy and a huge fortune.

He was born at the London residence of his grandparents in grosvenor square.

One of the baby's ancestors was the Lord Winchilsea who went through a form of a duel with the great Duke of Wellington, but apparently made up with him afterwards, for he eventually married the Iron Duke's great-niece.

RABBI BROWN SUES CHURCH

Rabbi Edward B. M. Brown, formerly of the Congregation Mishkan Tefila, corner of Morwood and Copeland streets, Roxbury, has brought suit against that organization for breach of contract.

He maintains that when the congregation engaged him at a yearly salary of $1,500 several years ago it employed him for life.

Abraham Alexander, president of trustees of No. 81 Bedford street, and leader in the congregation, which finally elected his relations with the Rabbi. He was plainly told Rabbi Brown that he was engaged by the congregation for one year.

"At the expiration of one year, we expected to receive from him an application for another term of service. This he refused to make. Then the trouble began. In the congregation, which finally elected his relations with us. We did everything in our power to avoid trouble. We prompted him three months' vacation and then of the matter would close. This he refused to accept and insisted that he was engaged for life. We could not go against our constitution, which plainly says that no rabbi is elected for life. We did everything I say, to smooth over the matter."

Simeon Finberg of No. 72 Bedford street, treasurer of the defendant congregation, who had a summons served on him while attending a wedding recently, said: "He was not hired for life by our congregation."

Rabbi Brown entered upon his duties with the Roxbury congregation in 1907, and remained there after a year's service. He is well known in many places in the United States. The Grand Lodge of Israel funeral in New York city refused to open its doors to anyone naked. He has held several important positions in his denomination.

The Brown Bottle protects Schlitz purity from the Brewery to your glass

See that crown or cork is branded "Schlitz."

Schlitz is brewed in the dark—stored for months in glass lined steel enameled tanks—bottled in darkened rooms where even the window shades are drawn to exclude the light—then sent to you in brown bottles.

Without all of these precautions, no beer can be healthful, and who knowingly would drink beer that was not.

Light starts decay even in pure beer. Dark glass gives protection against light.

RUSTLERS PLAY REDS LAST GAME OF SERIES

By R. W. LARDNER.

The Reds will make their last appearance of the season on the Columbus avenue grounds this afternoon. They have taken two straight from Fred Tenney's Rustlers, although the latter have pounded their pitchers hard.

The Rustlers feel sure they can cop the final battle of the series if they have good pitching on their own side. The batting job will probably be intrusted to George Tyler or Buster Brown to-day.

Manager Griffith is figuring on using Sieges or Fromme and fixers the former.

"Hickory" Jackson is still hitting. The anticipated slump has failed to put in its appearance and the bags are beginning to look on the new Rustler beflodder as something more than a temporary star.

There must have been a convention of the Jackson tribe last year, and it must have been unanimous sentiment that one tribe should try to win for itself more than honorable mention in baseball history. Anyhow, Joe and George are now working their heads off for the pennant in the near future, and Manager Jackson is to make much of a hit at the position. Cleveland had an outfielder named Jimmy Jackson a few years ago, but he didn't possess class enough to make people remember him.

Joe and George are not related, as far as they know. In fact, they've never met. But each is proud of the other and proud of the name, and each pulls for the other's success with good results.

George, alias "Hickory," has been in professional baseball since the Fall of 1907. He broke in with the Lake Charles, La., club in the Gulf Coast League and the league didn't blow up until late in the season. Then George was one of the sluggers of the circuit, and if all the other athletes had been responsible he was how the organization would have existed longer.

Idle a Few Days.

When the league blew up George remained idle for only a few days. They'd heard of him down in Dallas, Tex., and decided to give him a trial. He went down to Dallas and made good from the jump because he's no hand to stay over-long in an infielder of him, but according to his own statement, he was "too old an' weak-kneed." He wasn't the best outfielder in the world at that time, either. Now he was willing and he learned all the Dallas people could teach him.

George remained with the Dallas club through the balance of 1908, the entire season of 1909 and most of the campaign of 1910. Late last year Bill Bernhard heard about him and brought him up to Memphis, where he was at once given a regular job in centre.

Jackson went like a house afire in the Southern League and was going even better this year when Billy Hamilton spotted him. As everybody knows, the Rustlers needed a good outfielder or two. Billy was authorized to deal with Bernhard and the result was the transfer of George to Boston. If the local team don't succeed to send Ferguson to Memphis immediately it would have had to wait until the end of the season for George.

Lacks the Speed.

Jackson lacks the speed of Joe, who is about as fast as anybody in the business. For this reason he will probably never shine as brilliantly as the Nap in all-round ability. However, George has started so far about as hard as the Clevelander and his left fielding has been better than that of anybody else who has tackled the job for the Rustlers this year.

George has a strong Southern accent, and it takes him a couple of days to ask a question or answer one. He couldn't have picked out a more pleasing more of the "folks from home." Hub Perdue, Rebel McTigue, Hank Wyszer, Pepper Griffin and Jack Spratt are from the sunny South, and you have only to converse with one of them to find it out. When a few more of Billy Hamilton's recruits come North the Rustlers will probably wear gray uniforms and the whole will sing "Dixie" in chorus before each battle. Furthermore, training expenses will be cut down a lot when almost half the athletes can get in shape right at home.

The St. Louis Cardinals will be on hand tomorrow for four games, a double-header is on the card for Friday.

RED SOX MOVE ON TO ST. LOUIS

CLEVELAND, Aug. 23.—Well, the Red Sox have left us and are now speeding toward St. Louis, where they start upon a series of games to-morrow, thus leaving them without a game to-day.

One little lone tally was all that was forthcoming in the final game of the season between the Naps and Red Sox at Somer's Park and inasmuch as it was garnered by the Naps it kept the Red Sox from gaining on the Tigers and advancing that much nearer their goal.

Red Sox Want Second Place.

The tribe of Donovan is ambitious. The Boston boys are anxious to finish in second place and they confidently believe that this will be the case before the curtain is lowered on the American League stage in October. The Red Sox have it figured out with the Athletics having the pennant practically clinched the spirit of the Tigers will be broken and they will not play nearly so well in the future as they have in the past.

The Red Sox want the honor of finishing as runners up to the Mackmen and will put forth every effort to accomplish that result. They surely played fine ball Tuesday, and the pitching of Pape would have won three times out of ten. This, however, proved to be the tenth time.

Jackson and Rube Bressler in the field, batting, after two hands had been retired, and was on the way home on Lajoie's terrific wallop to centre. Larry's drive would have been a home run inasmuch as it was as fleet afoot as Cobb, Speaker or Jackson, but the Frenchman's injury is still bothering him and he was content to stop at second. He tried to score a moment later on Birmingham's single to left, but Lewis's gun-shot whipped Larry at the plate.

Might Hill to a Mountain.

That run looked like a mole hill at the start, but as each succeeding inning passed it grew larger and larger until the ninth, when it assumed mountainous proportions. Southpaw Vean Gregg was master of the situation at all times, and the Red Sox were unable to get a man around. Gregg, who accorded grand support throughout, gave only 4 hits in innings with the pesky inning, and had it not been for the one run credited to the Naps in the first stanza, the chances are the game would have gone to 20 innings with the possibility of no runs being scored.

ELKS HOLD OUTING AT HOUGHTON'S FARM

The Cambridge Lodge of Elks will hold their annual outing to-day at Houghton's farm, Silver Lake. There will be sports of all kinds, including a special baseball game between the Lynn Lodge of Elks and Cambridge Lodge.

NOTED LIGHTWEIGHT M'KEEVER DEAD

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 23.—Charlie McKeever, who several years ago was among the best of Philadelphia's lightweight pugilists, is dead in a hospital here from pneumonia. During his ring career he fought many well-known boxers.

McKeever, since his retirement from the ring, has been an actor on the vaudeville stage. He was thirty-seven years old.

CATCHER WEEDEN LET OUT.

TOLEDO, O., Aug. 23.—Catcher Weeden, formerly of the New England League, who was recently signed by Toledo after getting his release from the Boston Nationals, has been let out by Manager Hitchman of the local American Association team.

Notes Gathered Between Innings

It was another one of those games. Tim Hurst, Bridwell, Cheltenam & Co. were then rattled gamely and caught up, only to count in the ninth by wretched fielding.

Sweeney and Ingerton were out of commission, Bill having a sore finger and Scotty a bad cold. Manager Chesney and Jack Spratt filled in.

Not one time the Rustlers had seven left-handed batters in the lineup, Kling and Suggs being the only right-handers.

Some of the hits made off Old Cy were scratch crushes, but some of them were the scratchiest sort. The fielding behind him was fine.

Manager Griffith was so slow about passing up his mind regarding a change of pitchers that Dick O'Day passed his watch and warned Griff to ginger up a bit.

Old Cy was given a big basket of flowers just before the game started. It contained a card on which were written the words, "From Four Fans."

The attendance was over 8,000, the biggest Tuesday crowd of the season.

The crowd stuck with the Rustlers to the finish and in the early innings were pulling for the rally. It came in the fifth and almost everybody was willing to bet that the game belonged to Boston.

There's one consolation. The jumping Frank Smith was given in the fifth was harder than anything the Boston pitchers had to suffer. Seven safe wallops were made off the plano mover in that one round.

CRACK AMATEURS IN STAKE RACE

Some of the foremost amateurs of the country, including Arnold Lawson of this city, will be seen in the Blue Hill stakes for 2.19 class, trotting, at Readville next week. Mr. Lawson agreed this morning to pilot one of the entries in the race, and he will be by no means the least experienced driver. He has frequently started some of his horses in the annual gold cup internity races, and last year was called on to officiate in one of the entries in the Tavern Stake.

The drivers in this Blue Hill stake will not only be experts at the reins, but, almost without exception, will be men of no small means. In addition to Arnold Lawson there will be seen some of the other drivers, Frank G. Jones of Memphis, who has been associated with C. K. G. Billings in a number of business connections and who owns several of the horses in Ed Geers's string, including Annie the M. & M. Mooney, raise the smart Idward, and Dudie Archdale, the big money winner of last season.

Jones Equal of Professionals.

Mr. Jones, while strictly an amateur, is as good a horseman as the best and the of the professionals, and when Geers was laid up a year ago with a broken leg it was Jones who piloted Uhlan to the winning stakes, as well as several other of Geers's horses.

John R. Townsend of Goshen is another who will be seen in the sulky, he will bring with him the two sons of E. H. Harriman for the race. Mr. Townsend is a close personal friend of the late Mr. Harriman, and they always attended the races together, as well as going politics. Townsend is a Democrat.

Harry K. Devereux of Cincinnati president of the Ohio Driving Club of America, and also president of the Grand Circuit, has entered a horse which he can be counted upon, though he has not driven in a race for years.

Chester W. Lauck of Wilmington, and also a lodge of Middletown, Ohio, is another of whom we shall see a few. He brings right through the circuit a horse that has been a winner, and having entered his mare, Ethel Lynn, with which he had hoped to win for M. & M. Farm next, while Mr. Dodge's entry in the late season, Zombo, was another horse that has topped more than one summer.

Benefits for Public.

Work will be started tomorrow upon the erection of the temporary grand stand seats, as well as a long string of boxes all of which have been taken care of long early, for the entire four days of the meeting. Mr. Whitney announced before this year in admitting the public to the clubhouse lawn and grounds, as well as to the entire lower floor of the building.

All of the little structures within the track enclosure have been taken down, with the exception of the small house which stand and the big judges' stand. The pole has been removed the entire length of the home stretch, thus giving a clear unobstructed view of the horses for every step of the mile.

Among visitors to the track yesterday was George Dodge, one of the best known of the Boston horsemen, and the great three-year-old Trotting Futurity winner, Uhlan. Mr. Dodge has gone to Europe on a pleasure trip. Feeling sure that Uhlan will win, Mr. Dodge has a chance to win the Breeders' Futurity here. Mr. Moore has intended to go to Europe and will remain over for the race, calling for the entries the latter part of next week.

PLAN BIG BENEFIT FOR "DUMMY" GRIFFIN

A grand testimonial benefit will be given William "Dummy" Griffin by his numerous friends and baseball fans next Monday night at the Columbia Road Park. This clever young ball player has been ill for several weeks and the boys, realizing his financial condition, will give him a lot of good, hard earned cash. A fine program has been arranged and will be given to enable him to spend the winter in a warmer climate than the country.

Bill players, boxers and every popular athlete in the South End who knows Griff will turn out to make the entertainment a big success.

DESHLER SURE HE'LL WIN BOUT

By KNOCKOUT.

Dave Deshler, the star pupil lightweight, and Ray Brosius, the Western whirlwind, are both in the best of condition for their ten-round battle at Indianapolis Labor Temple to-night, and each is confident of victory.

Deshler has been training hard for the bout, and has been working every day since he returned from Lowell, where he was forced to a draw by Johnny Wallis. Dave has been doing his roadwork over the hills of Brighton, and has been sparring with Jimmy Murray, Young Fitzgerald and Young Bowen. He says he will have no trouble in making the weight, and will be in the ring at 133 pounds.

Brosius has been training at Indianapolis, and has been sparring with Jack Dillon, Jimmy Murray and Young Fitzgerald. He says he will be in the ring at 133 pounds.

Joe Jeanette and Dynamo Marsh, the New York negro, will be the star attraction at Mechanics' Building, Providence, to-night. Marsh is a fast boxer, and has been training hard for the bout. He says he will be in the ring at 158 pounds.

Jack Dillon and George Cowbley, the Vincennes, Ind., boxer, will be the main event at Vincennes to-night. Dillon has been training hard for the bout, and says he will be in the ring at 158 pounds.

Johnny Wallis and Jack Deming, the New York boxer, will be the star attraction at Lowell to-night. Wallis has been training hard for the bout, and says he will be in the ring at 133 pounds.

Tony Ryan is now booked to meet Joe Jeanette at the Providence Opera House August 31. This makes it look as though the Ryan-Ryan fight would be off. Tony has declined to meet Jeanette in Providence, as he says he is not in condition to box a colored man. He has been training hard for the bout, and says he will be in the ring at 158 pounds.

THREE FAST MEN IN BIKE RACE

Sid Butler, manager of the Revere cycle track, has arranged one of the best cards of the season for his weekly meet-ing, which will be held on Saturday evening. The feature race of the evening will bring together three of the best men that Lowell has ever produced on a bicycle in the persons of Elmer Collins, Jimmy Moran and Clarence Cannon.

Collins and Moran are old trackmates and resided in the last few years, and the fans of the section have been anxious to see the two in a match race against Cannon, but they are sure to turn out strong for the event.

Cannon has been on the Beach track a few weeks and has been defeated by Collins, but it was owing to an injury that he received in a spill, and as far as loafing in time on a half lap is at the time he was forced to retire from the race.

In addition to the main event there will be several other events on the card, the winners and two to be entered for the amateur riders. Manager Butler is planning to have a big card on the fans this week, and to make it worth their while to go to the track.

CHURCH TO SHOW HOW FIGHTS ARE CONDUCTED

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Aug. 23.—To show the general public which does not believe in fighting that there is a way to get a lasting hurt in stages and how the methods are used in the pursuance of the doctrines of the United Methodist Church, it is expected to stage a fight between members of either for presentation to give two rounds to professional pugilists next Thursday night. Both men are graded athletes and are well known personally throughout the state, which will be features of the exhibition for the benefit of the church funds.

WE PREPAY THE EXPRESS AND YOU GET CITY PRICES

THIS Is the Whiskey That Has BUILT Our Mail Order Business

The brand that we advertise to introduce our catalog is exactly the same brand that we rely on to hold our over-the-counter business. CALLAHAN "A" is just as prominent in our window displays on Federal St. as it is in the advertisements we send out to carry "Callahan Quality" and "Callahan Service" to the most remote corners of Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont. We have no special brands and no special prices for our city customers. We want our long-distance customers to understand that when we pay express charges, as we do on all New England orders for 4 quarts or more of Callahan A, we do not take the express charges out of the quality of the goods. The man who buys CALLAHAN A whiskey pays over the counter every cent that you pay for it and gets a bargain just as you do. Callahan is a part of our profit to get business from a distance and we rely on the quality of CALLAHAN A to produce other orders from all over New England. We are glad to send you this splendid, pure, palatable whiskey at the price of 4 full quarts for $3; 6 full quarts for $4.50, and 3 full quarts for $6. And here's another thing we wish to speak of while we think of it. If one shipment in 20 came back to us because of dissatisfaction the express charges would swamp us. Remember that we sell every shipment on a money-back guarantee. If you are not satisfied you can return the goods at our expense. We have made this offer for years. The reason we can do so is simply that the shipments don't come back. IT'S THE CUSTOMERS THAT COME BACK. That's why we can sell extra quality goods through the mail at same prices. Give CALLAHAN A a trial. If you go into a local bar or liquor store, ask for CALLAHAN A, and look for the bottle shown here. We say not only that it shall be a brilliant, clean, pure, palatable whiskey of extra fine quality, but we go further than that and guarantee that CALLAHAN "A" shall SATISFY you—that you will like it. We will ship your order without the slightest delay and send your money back just as promptly if you don't find our goods extra value. BUCK CROUSE AND BERGER GO FAST BOUT AT ARMORY

BUCK CROUSE BATTLES BERGER TO A DRAW

By JACK CONWAY.

Once again Leo Amory "Buck" Crouse, the sturdy Pittsburg middleweight, demonstrated that he is one of the cleanest boxers that ever crowded through the ropes of a local ring. When the Pittsburg whirlwind vanquished Ted Nelson of Australia and Frank Perron of Pawtucket, as rated them as a great battler. But "Buck" eclipsed his former work in this city when he fought Billy Berger of Wildwood, N. J., a dusky battler of a twenty-round bout at the Armory A. A.

The fight was at catch-weights. Crouse weighed about 158 pounds, while Berger tipped the beam at 170 pounds at the start. Even with this great advantage in weight, Berger was unable to win or even draw.

Berger used his weight to advantage throughout the battle. He kept boring in on Crouse trying for all he was worth to slip across a knockout. His endeavors at critical stages of the fight, however, were fruitless and impotent.

Berger did the greater amount of the forcing. His aggressiveness he had it on Crouse. But the latter was not content to remain outside for long. He also attempted to force the fighting and did it in a much better than himself. If he followed some of his opponent's leads, he also was able to confirm without the usual semblance of retreating.

Instead of nothing a mixing fight, Crouse showed himself the cleverer boxer of the two and fathomed Berger with his left time after time. Jersey man would lightly for a clinch, but Crouse would push him back to have a mother and soon he had Berger where he wanted him.

No Claret Flowed.

Neither fighter scored a knockdown. Toward the end of the instructive Crouse stepped and went to the mat for he was in a hot fight. It was a clean fall, as it was Billy Berger who aided the action by stepping on the rope.

A cause was the only decision that the referee could render. Berger was the aggressor throughout and Crouse was content to the same time to do justice to both boxers. Berger was the more willing to mix it and Crouse the more clever. Both were willing to mix it and Crouse the more clever. Both were like a lightning ball apiece from the mitts. But neither could be said to have connected pulled the punch.

While dancing around in the first round Crouse received a fierce left hook to the jaw.

Tiring of having Crouse going at the sitting, Billy started another jaw and another hard right. But in the mix-up Crouse then stepped around the ring for a few seconds, but was taken down by Berger. His face illuminated with his first ten-strike.

Toward the latter part of the round the Wildwood terror got in some telling blows to the body of his foe.

Blood in Berger's Eye.

In the second round Berger made his appearance with blood in his eye. He came with blood in his eye. He came with a rush to bore down on his opponent, pushing him around the ring while he was at it and right to the wind. Crouse then stepped around the ring for a few seconds, but was taken down by Berger. His face illuminated with his first ten-strike.

Toward the latter part of the round the Wildwood terror got in some telling blows to the body of his foe.

Blood in Berger's Eyes.

In the second round Berger made his appearance

"Dear Mister Reporter of the Yung Amerika Malgamated Nationals. Put this here letter in the paper, cause I am the vice president of the deege and you have to do what I say else I will get you canned. Egleston Sporting Goods is backing me and they are some pitchers. They have got the inown my team and the Umpchers. He is the best pitcher in the deege. You shall and see if he aint.

"Then put this letter in the paper cause I say so. I am the vice-president of this deege. Mr. Umpers is the president but he is away to the country now.

PEGGY MELLANE,
Vice President of the Yung Amerika Malgamated Nationals."

The above letter is one which lay on our desk this morning along with a lot of bills and tailors' announcements of reduced prices on Summer clothing.

We found it to be the most interesting of the bunch. It is a pretty fair sample of twenty or thirty communications we have received from "Puggy" Mellane during the last two weeks. He has been bawling about some new pitcher he was dickering with to sign up with his team, the Wasps.

All the comment we can offer is that we hope he has signed him up and that he will turn out, as per press notice. He is a popular lad in the deege. We will be glad to size him up for our readers. Full reports in to-morrow's paper.

Emily Morton still has Socks and his bank roll under full control. Nobody cares much about Socks, but everybody has their eyes on the bank roll. Several well laid schemes have failed to bite into it any. At the time we went to press it was still in Emily's pocketbook.

The Age of Indiscretion

By DOROTHY DIX

THE other day a woman came to see me who was in a peck of trouble. She is a trim, trig, bright, pretty little woman of about forty, and she is married to a man of sixty-five, who has grown stout, pudgy and bald.

To any one else this man is about as little alluring and romantic a creature as you could find in a Sabbath day's journey, but to his wife he is still an Adonis and a Romeo, and she is just as much in love with him as if it were the Springtime of life to them, instead of the Autumn.

To do him justice the man has always been an excellent husband and father, and kind and generous to his family—until within the last couple of months. Since a certain disreputable affair, however, when they went to a cheap vaudeville show everything has been changed. On that occasion a painted and bottleneck girl, who was doing a turn, sang a song with a kissing refrain to which she gave point by leaning over the edge of the box in which he sat and giving the short, stout, pudgy, bald gentleman a resounding smack.

It brought down the house, and it also brought down the short, stout, pudgy bald gentleman. In the slang of the street he fell for that kiss, and since then has done nothing but follow the girl about, neglecting his family and his business, and lavishing all of his money upon the sorceress. So that he has informed his wife that she must find a cheaper apartment to live in, and that their son, a bright, studious boy of eighteen, must stop school this Fall and go to work.

Her Predicament

The wife is in despair. She has remonstrated with her husband as kindly as she could, and attempted to show him that no girl of twenty is in love with a short, stout, pudgy, bald man of sixty-five, but nothing shakes the mare's-nest conviction that he is a heart smasher, and that he has only to glance at any woman of any age to set her heart to wildly pitapating.

To this distressed wife's query as to what she should do under the circumstances there is but one reply to be made, and that is just to sit still and wait for the man to get the inevitable jolt that the girl will hand him. Then, humiliated, sore, bruised—and plucked—he will come sneaking back to his wife to be comforted, and he will be a chastened creature the balance of his days.

No young girl tolerates the attentions of an old man except for the money she can get out of him, and sooner or later she shows her hand, so that the poor, purblind fellow cannot help but see it, and realize with shame what an easy mark he has been, and how he has been worked.

Then he hankers a bee line back to home and mother, to have himself rehabilitated in his own esteem. Any middle-aged woman whose middle-aged husband goes wandering off after strange gods can rest assured that she can get him back if only she has enough patience, and if she thinks such a poor thing is worth taking back.

Observe the Rich

Such a sordid tragedy as this woman's is worth discussing here because it is so common. Not many wives escape having to stand helplessly by and see their husbands go through an Indian Summer madness in which they are enamoured of girls young enough to be their daughters, or granddaughters. Indeed, it may almost be said that poverty is the only thing that safeguards a man against this form of senile insanity, and protects his wife from the suffering it entails.

As witness of this observe the frequency with which our multimillionaires, with newly acquired fortunes, trade off their old wives for new, and the fact that in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred when you hear of a married man eloping with his stenographer, or a chorus girl, or some other affinity, he is past middle age, and well off, or else he carries the firm's cash with him.

The truth is the age of indiscretion, so far as women are concerned, begins with a man of fifty or thereabouts. Up to that time he has looked upon the fair sex with a suspicious eye. He has taken note of their arts and wiles, he has appraised their smiles and delved into their motives. Moreover he has not sung in himself a hypnotist who would set women crazy, and for this reason he walks safely among the snares of the temptress.

But let him cross the fifty line and he throws judgment and common sense and reason about women to the winds, and the other he gets the less intelligence on the subject he displays. He is any woman's meat that she chooses to be so to any one that a girl baby can work him.

There is no flattery so sticky he won't gulp it down and swallow for more. There is no lie so glaring he won't believe it. There is no folly so great he won't commit it.

He will believe that a girl of eighteen will marry him for love alone, that the kisses that he has to pay for are spontaneous, that his fat, pudgy figure and bald head are more beautiful in a maiden's eyes than the silkiness and ambrosial locks of a young college athlete, and he refuses to admit that somehow all the love he gets has a price tag on it and is intimately connected with his check book.

Why this is thus nobody knows, but the infatuation of old men for young girls is just a complaint of middle-age as measles is of youth, and his wife has to nurse him through one ailment just as his mother brought him the other. The only comfort is that he generally recovers, unless he is very rich, but in the meantime he makes a spectacle of himself for God and men to hear of, for truly there is no fool like an old fool.

Trouble

SHE was a good servant, was Jennie, and Mrs. Wansfeder never wished for better. But in the matter of pictures Jennie was weak. There was one in particular which showed the Leaning Tower of Pisa. Every day Mrs. W. hung it straight, and every morning Jennie put it crooked.

"Now, look here, Jennie," she said, "you're living that picture of the tower crooked again. Just look at it!"

"That's just what I say, mum," returned the domestic, dolefully. "Look at it! The only way you can get that silly tower to hang straight is to hang the picture crooked."

A Surprise

THE newly made lord stood in his new-gained grandeur, with a self-made smile of proprietorship upon his face. He was monarch of all he surveyed.

Beyond the park gates that divided his estate from the road he espied a couple of old countrywomen. They were gazing through the bars with admiration depicted in every furrowed line of their features.

"Some of my parishioners, by love!" growled the lordly one, turning to his companion. "The admiration of the poor's very amusin'. Wonder what they're sayin'?"

As they drew within earshot they heard the elder woman exclaim:

"Just wuat I was thinking myself, Jane—what a lovely spot that would make to dry the washing in!"

WHERE LOVE FAILED

"Maybe she won't like me any more, but I can't help it."

"What happened?"

"Her pet poodle was under the mistletoe and I failed to take the chance."

The Manicure Lady

She Discourses on the Subject of Hicks to George

"GEORGE," said the Manicure Lady, "did you get a flash at the Hick that just went out? I might have known it, I might have."

"What's the matter?," the Head Barber wanted to know.

"Oh, nothing," replied the Manicure Lady. "When I'm stung I don't make any roar."

"What's the matter," the Head Barber persisted.

"Well, sir," answered the Manicure Lady, "if you want to know, that person who has just got through having his nails did is one of the most impossible persons which I ever met. I oughtn't to talk that way about him, at that, George, because he is a clever comedian. He admits that much himself. His act is a screech. He played it all over the moving picture circuit last month, and he told me that they knocked the audience out of their seats."

"Sounds kind of bunky to me," said the Head Barber. "I never seen a moving picture audience that was easy to knock out of their seats. Lots of them stay to see the same show over again."

"George," said the Manicure Lady, impressively, "I have often heard of Hicks, and I never really knew what sins was until I had this session to-day with this particular Hick. Take it from me, Lady,' he says to me while he is having his nails did, 'take it from me, we made good because we gave them the gravy, the good stuff, the knockout drops. There was just two of us, the gal and yours sincerely, and we worked in one, with a lot of that patter stuff. It was a riot, a scream!'"

"I've heard a lot of 'em talk," said the Head Barber, indifferently. "They sure hate themselves, don't they?"

"This one did, anyhow," replied the Manicure Lady. "He gave me some of his verses that he and his lady friend sang, and he asked me to take them home and try them on the piano. He explained to me that the beauty about them was of that they was new. Listen to one or two of them, George. It will do you good to know that there is some people in the world thicker than you are. Get this one:

"Here we are, two Broadway people,
Higher than a Broadway steeple,
Out where Broadway lights do shine,
Always drinking Broadway wine;
Broadway boys and Broadway girls,
Broadway suits and Broadway curls.
Woops! My dear! We'll sleep by day,
While at night we roam BROADWAY!

"Well, George, after you have heard all this grand outpouring of lyrics, what do you think?"

"The gent was kind of sore on Broadway, wasn't he?" asked the Head Barber. "I wonder why is it that the merry, merry boys that plays pantoor nights now and then is always so keen to boost Broadway, I street that they never see except the first few weeks after they get their regular Summer suit. And I wonder what they think we care about Broadway over here in Boston, anyway."

"You can search me, George," answered the Manicure Lady. "I often wish that I could be back where the red and white clover grows, away from the four-dashing You don't know how sick and tired I get of the 'Peeping of the Cork' stuff. Gee! I'd like to meet some natural people again."

"My wife was saying the same thing the other day," mused the Head Barber, "and I guess she got her wish, because I happened to get home with a little fish on that night and she told me that I never looked more natural."

"I'M not asking you to tell me that," said Sir Ian, with a certain impatience. "I want to know why, and for how long you and Barr were in the Tower together."

He wrote me letters to the postoffice in the village. Only the postmistress knew, I think. As a girl she was in my father's parish, and he was very good to her and her family. She was grateful, and Ian and I owe it to her that the gossip about his being seen the day—of the murder, was hushed up.

"Her daughter saw him, but afterward the mother induced her to forget, and it never could be found out where the rupee started. It was a long time since we had seen each other.

"We'd only met once before, since he gave up the stewardship. That time it was in the Tower, too, and we chose that place because it was one quiet and remote—I hardly any one ever went there—and because it was the best for us, in many ways. Ian had the key.

"Oh! How did he come to have one? The key that was lent him once he gave back when he finished his work."

Had the New Key

"He had the key for a very simple reason. He told me all about it. One day he lost the borrowed key, and was vexed with himself, so he ordered another one made. He got a locksmith to go up to the Tower—"

"No doubt the police have learned that by this time."

"I suppose so. Anyway, after he'd had the new key a few days, he found the borrowed one, somewhere about the house. When he returned it, he kept the other, which used to be in the desk, he says, until he thought that some one was using it; after that he put it out of sight; but when he moved, he took the key away with him, thinking to use it, as he did, afterward—to open the Tower door, and meet me."

"Was it he who unlocked the door of the ground-floor room?"

"Yes. Because we had talked there, the first time we met; and he was in that lower room, waiting for me when I arrived, that second day—to-day. But it smelt musty and damp, for the sun never gets in; so we went upstairs, and sat in the room above instead, where it was pleasanter.

"I'm sure, though, we did not 'save the door open. We shut it after us. I suppose I locked that door, I locked it; but it seems he forgot. We were making plans for his going to America, and sending for me, when we heard voices. You know whose."

"Well?"

"From the first the conversation was so very terrible that we couldn't let it be known that we were there. We looked at each other, and Ian whispered to me that we must just bear it and try to forget afterward. He said almost anything would be better than one should know who had heard such secrets.

"She would hate her life, only thinking that we knew. And of course we meant never to tell—never even to speak of it again to each other. Sometimes there would be blanks—sentences we didn't hear, sometimes whole, and then those awful, awful soliloquys.

"Then the Shots"

"At last—came the two shots, one right after the other. I felt as if I should faint, and I did almost. I felt myself falling, but Ian caught me in his arms and held me up.

"For a few minutes, I think, I wasn't wholly conscious, but I never quite refused, for I knew Ian had me in his arms all the time; and when I came back to myself he was holding me still."

"What then?" Sir Ian's voice was hoarse, as if his lips and tongue were dry.

"I listened for a while, and there wasn't a sound. It seemed a ghastly kind of silence, after what had happened. At last I whispered to Ian, and asked what he thought of the shots. He answered that he was afraid they could mean only one thing, but he would go down and look.

"I said if he went I would go too. He must not go alone, because, if anyone else had heard the shots, and came to see, it might be thought that he—had had something to do with the thing. That idea came to me even then, because everybody talked about the way Lady Hereward felt toward Ian, and how it was through her he gave up his place. I begged him to take me, and said I couldn't stay upstairs, alone. I told him I could bear whatever we might have to see.

"So I went down the stairs behind Ian, and we found the door of the ground-floor room a little open. Ian said, 'I must have forgotten to lock it.' You see from what we heard, we weren't quite sure whether the voices came from the inside of the Tower or outside.

"We couldn't have seen from the one window in our room, anyway, even if we had looked out, which of course we didn't. It was bad enough to hear such things; but as there was no glass in the window, which had been broken long time, we couldn't shut out the sounds.

"When Ian pushed the door wider open, I peeped over his shoulder, and—I saw her. Oh, the look in her staring eyes! It was too agonising. I forgave her everything, and I hated you. I have hated you ever since."

"You can't hate me more than I hate myself," Sir Ian groaned. But the bitter anguish in his face and voice waked no pity in the girl's heart, full of gentle compassion for others.

No Slackness

HE had only recently come from college, but his father, who owned the business, had made him manager, and he meant to make things hum. There would be no slackness where he was.

When, therefore, he met a neatly dressed clerk coming up the office steps at noon he promptly stopped him.

"What time do you usually get here?" he asked him.

"Oh," came the calm answer, "I usually stroll in about 12 o'clock."

"Stroll in!" Um! I suppose you leave at a late hour?"

"Generally get away before 3—quite long enough for me."

"Get away at 3!" Oh, indeed! Just as I thought. Slackness and unpunctuality everywhere. We'll speak about this. Tell me, what department are you in? Who are you?

"Me? I'm the man who comes on Mondays to wind up the clocks!"

A Mystery Solved

For years medical men have been seeking a cure for eczema, the most common and most stubborn of skin diseases. Some said it was a blood disease; some said it was the result of indigestion. It remained for one studious chemist to settle beyond any question that eczema in many forms is a skin disease, and related in no way to a disordered condition of the blood. The same chemist experimented with many antiseptic, healing and soothing agents, but it was not until he formed compound Cadum that he at last realized he had given to the world something that would bring relief to hundreds of sufferers. Cadum ranks to-day with the great remedies of the medical world. Its action is so positive that the itching or eczema is stopped at once. People who have itched and scratched for years find sleep and rest soon after Cadum is applied. Cadum is sc-l by all druggists at 10c and 25c a box. It is for eczema in all its forms, also for pimples, blotches, itch, tetter, scaly skin, eruptions, chafings, psoriasis, rash, sores, scurvy, scabs, itching piles, etc.

HAVE COURAGE, ROSAMOND! I WILL FOIL CLAUDE'S DIABOLICAL PLOT. IT'S TOO LATE TO WARN THE ENGINEER.

YOU REFUSE TO MARRY ME, EH ROSAMOND? YOUR LOVER CANNOT STOP THIS EXPRESS
THE HORSE SHOES WILL SAVE MY SWEETHEART! I AM AN EXPERT QUOIT THROWER SAVED!
YOU MAY ACCEPT MY HAND IN MARRIAGE, MISS ROSAMOND!

Here is a great trestle scene. Rosamond, the central figure—naturally, since woman always has the centre of the stage—is bound to the rails, and when the train seen approaching in the distance runs over her little hands she will drop to her death in the chasm below. Close beside her hangs the quivering lariat. Rosamond, ready to grant over her awful fate. Rushing up rapidly on horseback is our hero, Claude Eclaire. He can do nothing to save his sweetheart, apparently. So you have before you a thrilling dramatic situation, showing hero, heroine and villain, the melodramatic triangle.

Continuing along the line, you will observe that Claude has dismounted from his horse and is engaged in tinkering with that animal's feet. You cannot guess why? We thought not—that she was the artist's skill in devising inaginious pictures, but of course in the next scene you get the solution. Claude will save the hands of Rosamond by dropping the horseshoes over them. It takes a good alm, but Claude used to pitch horseshoes with Charles Warren Fairbanks. Don't know him? He was Vice-President of the United States and either drank or didn't drink a cocktail, we forget which.

Needless to say, Claude's aim was as true as its heart, and the perverting horseshoes drop aaugly over Rosamond's hands, effectually shielding them from the train wheels, which pass harmlessly over them. She is saved. "I'm the boy!" cries Desperate Desmond, "but I've got to dock!" as he does a hand over hand skiddoo along the bottom of the trestle, with Claude after him. It is sure to prove a desperate race, and the scene is so close of nothing what happens except by looking at to-morrow's picture. In the meantime there is a young but brave lad aiding the girl. Canning and Preserving

(Reprinted by Permission from August "Good Housekeeping")

EVEN in this day when canned vegetables and fruits of the best quality can be bought, it is well to do some preserving one's self. When a garden produces more than enough for the table, it is a decided economy to "put up" the remainder.

In the old days fruits and vegetables were prepared for Winter use by preserving and drying. At the present time, canning is an almost universal way of keeping for Winter use that which Summer produces. The syrups for preserved fruits is much heavier than that used in canning. Bacteria do not grow rapidly in any syrup and cannot penetrate one with a large amount of sugar. Bacteria causes food substances to spoil and molds act in the same way. Consequently these bacteria which are in the fruit or jars must be destroyed and the air which contain them must be excluded.

When a liquid containing fruit boils or reaches a temperature of 212 degrees, bacteria are destroyed; if this boiling process is repeated several times the spores are killed, and finally complete sterilization is accomplished. Then, if the fruit or vegetables can be put in a receptacle which is also sterile, and the air be completely excluded, the contents will keep indefinitely. The writer has seen peaches opened eight years after they were sealed, and found to be in perfect condition.

First of all, let us consider the utensils needed. Buy good jars, glass and fresh rubbers. For a small family it is much better to use pint and half-pint jars; and it is economical, as then none of the contents is left to spoil. The rubbers should be new each season; old rubbers stretch, and air is liable to get in.

A porcelain lined or enamel preserving kettle is a necessity; if possible do not use it for other cooking, as the enamel is likely to chip, and sugar and fruit will "scorch" on that one spot, not perfect. A large funnel, such as grocers use, two or three wooden spoons, a skimmer, cheesecloth, flannel bag, a colander and scales are also necessary.

As canned one might have a large quantity of fruit to do all at once, but the better way is to do a few jars at a time when the article is cheap and plentiful. The housekeeper does not get tired and the supply closer fills slowly but surely.

Choose fruit which is ripe but not overripe. Clean thoroughly. Some fruits, as pineapple and quince, being hard, require cooking, and that may be done in water alone. Underripened the sugar may be boiled in the same water, and the syrup then obtained poured over the fruit. Have the jars thoroughly washed, then place in a kettle with a rack under them, and all kettle and jars with cold water. Bring to the boiling point and boil fifteen or twenty minutes. Remove onto a wet cloth and fill immediately with fruit. Be sure that the syrup overflows, as that makes sure that no air is present. After the covers have been fastened, turn upside down, back again, remove covers, and any air bubbles will be forced out. Add a little more hot syrup and seal tightly.

In making jelly—currant or grape—do not cook the stems with the fruit, for the jelly will not be so clear. Many years ago Miss Parloa stated that it is much better also to boil the fruit juice without the sugar. Have the sugar heated, add to the hot syrup, and stir only long enough to dissolve the sugar. The proportions are one pint of sugar to each pint of juice.

Marmalades are made from almost all the softer fruits, and the proportions used are half as much sugar as fruit and cooked as much water as sugar. Boil the fruit and water together for an hour, then add the sugar and boil for another hour, stirring often.

Following are three recipes—for a jelly, French pickle and a currant conserve.

GREEN GRAPE JELLY

Free the grapes from stems and leaves, put into a preserving kettle and heat slowly. Mash them as they begin to soften, and after the mixture reaches that boiling point simmer for half an hour. Cover a sieve, placed over a large bowl, with cheesecloth; dip the grapes and juice from the kettle and let them stand on the sieve ten minutes. Without forcing, moving the cheesecloth back and forth, let all the juice drip through which will continue until all the mixture has been strained. Measure the juice and put into preserving kettle, having carefully washed it. Bring to the boiling point, skim, and boil rapidly for twenty minutes. As soon as the juice begins to boil measure an equal part of sugar and put into a shallow pan—set pan in the oven and watch it that the sugar does not become colored. When the juice has boiled twenty minutes add sugar and stir until dissolved. Turn into jelly tumblers and set away to cool. Have the tumblers scalded before putting in jelly. A little melted paraffine is good to pour over the jelly after it is cold.

CURRANT CONSERVE

The metal covers can then be placed on as soon as one wishes.

Skim two and one-half pounds of currants, add three-fourths of a pound of raisins and two oranges. Chop raisins and oranges, add to currants with two pounds of sugar. Mix thoroughly and bring to the boiling point in a preserving kettle. Boil for thirty minutes, and put into jelly glasses. This recipe is from Mrs. H. C. McElwain.

FRENCH PICKLE

Slice four quarts of green tomatoes, peel and slice one quart of small onions, or if very small, use whole; separate one head of cauliflower into small pieces; cut one quart of small cucumbers into thick slices; cut six green peppers into small pieces, and chop one small head of cabbage. Put all into a light brine, using one-half cup salt to five quarts of water) and let them stand twenty-four hours. Drain thoroughly and steam until tender.

Mix together two-tablespoons dry mustard, one teaspoon tumeric powder, one and one-half cups of sugar, and one cup of flour and add enough water to make a paste. Add to two quarts boiling vinegar, and one pint water, and reanalded the mixture as custard. Add vegetables, put into jars and seal. This from Mrs. Charles Pitmer.

Quite True

IT was Nellie's first visit to the museum, and her mother was anxious to explain all things properly. Room after room they passed through, till at length they stood before a knight in shining armor.

"And this, Nellie," said the fond mother, "is a suit of armor which used to be worn by the knights of old. What do you think of it, dear?"

For a few brief seconds Nellie regarded it thoughtfully, then shook her head, emphatically. "Pshaw! It was all right," she said doubtfully. "But don't you think, mother, it must have scratched the furniture awfully?"

She did not join in McKinnon's laugh over the untimely end of Lecombia's telegraph system.

"At Boracco—that's the biggest of the banana shipping towns."

"It's hard to have to sit and wait for—for the inevitable this way," he said, with an assumption of cheerfulness.

"Yes, it is hard," she said, out of the silence that once more fell over them.

He felt, none the less, wordlessly grateful for her presence there, talking or silent. She seemed to bring a new and more vital atmosphere into his squalid little station. She seemed to throw a warm and transforming tint on everything about her, as he had seen a reputed stage-light actor and enrich the canvas and tinsel of a Broadway playhouse.

He saw her take a long and troubled breath, look up at him, and once more look away. The hum and whir of his electric fan was the only sound in the cabin.

"I don't think either of us has been quite honest with the other," she said, compelling herself to meet his puzzled gaze.

"I know—and I'm sorry," he replied, puzzling her again by his note of humanity.

"I've told you an untruth," she said at last, taking another deep breath.

"In what way?" asked McKinnon.

Did Not Die

"I lied to you, when Ganley and you were in my cabin. I can't bet it go on. I can't endure the thought of this lie standing between us like—oh, like a quick wood that can never be cleared."

"But what is it?" asked the other.

She looked up at him again, very steadily and very bravely.

"I told you that my husband was dead," she answered in her low and constrained voice. "He is not dead."

"He is not dead?" echoed McKinnon.

"I said that he died of yellow fever. He took the fever and was ill with it. But he did not die. He was sentenced and sent to the Island of Matpanta, on the Pacific coast. The Lecombian penal colony is there. He was sent there for life. He was dead, to all the world—he was dead to me."

"Then he is dead, to all——"

"Wait. I wanted to make sure of my freedom, to be foolishly sure of it. So I went North. Then I went to New Orleans, to my old home."

"But why?" he asked, as he noticed her hesitation.

"A felony in Louisiana, is a cause for absolute divorce."

"You mean you were set free in your own country?"

"Yes, that is why I went to the United States. That is why I was there when the news of this revolution first reached me."

"And Ganley knows this?" McKinnon demanded.

"Ganley knows everything," she answered.

"And this is why you are so against him?"

She had to school herself into self-control before she could go on.

"I have a better reason for being against him. If he and his Liberal Party once acquire power, Stanley will bring Perrain back to Guariqui; he will commute his sentence. He will do this to strike at my brother Arturo."

Both Against Ganley.

McKinnon looked at her in amazed and silent comprehension. At last he seemed able to understand, disturbed as he was by the thought of so fragile a figure entangled in such brutal and rudimentary conflicts.

The lack of notice for her presence in the same circle with Ganley, whether she dog or followir such a man, had been the undergrowth of her actual cause of more than one of his wayward suspicions. But now he understood. And her confession, instead of shocking and disturbing him, brought into his softened eyes a look of release, of more perfect understanding.

What she had told him seemed to be matter for, to bring her into touch with the world of realities as he had met and known it. The last of his old-time fear of her, his hampering awe of her, had vanished.

"We are both against Ganley," he said as though speaking to himself.

"You are against Stanley?" she questioned.

"To the end of time!" he answered, with a solemnity that brought her great gray dering eyes up to his. She noticed that he rose from his chair and closed the sliding door.

"Why have you changed?"

"I have not changed."

"Then what is it?"

"It's that I'm not going to be half honest with you that I ever continue not being honest with you! I am on this ship for the same purpose that you are here."

"To go to Lecombia?"

"Yes—to defeat Stanley."

"For what reason?"

"For your reason."

"But for whom?"

"For the Minister of War of the United States of Lecombia," answered McKinnon. He leaned a little towards her as he spoke, and lowered his voice, with a warning side glance towards the closed door.

"But my brother Arturo is the Lecombian Minister of War," she maintained, her eyes still wide with wonder.

"And for two months past I've been commissioned by your brother to keep in touch with practically every so-called 'Liberal' expatriate in New York. And only twenty hours before this ship sailed I found out what it carried and why it was necessary for me to be on board of it."

For a full minute she did not utter a word.

"Then you are a spy?" she said, at last.

"Scarcely a spy—I am merely a secret agent for Arturo Boynton's government," was his answer.

He could see the deep breath she took as she leaned reluctantly back to the fore an armed steamer chair.

To Be Continued To-morrow

So Good!

"GOOD boy—good little boy!" purred the Benevolent old Gentleman.

The good little boy gave a seraphic smile.

"Yes, I saw you, though you thought your good act was unnoticed," pursued the kindly gentleman. "I saw you give that long, rosy-cheeked apple to your pale-faced friend, and I observed, too, your cheerful manner, that you rejoiced in your generous act."

"You bet I did, guv'nor!" replied the angelic one. "An' I wish I could see Willie Brown eat it just! I took the inside out and filled it with mustard."

"What're ye runnin' home with your milk pail empty for?" demanded the farmer. "Didn't the old cow give you anything?"

"Yes," replied the boy, "she gave a quarts and one kick."

The morning was an inauspicious one for the new barber, for he had lost his customers. But he was full of hope, and so he industriously strained away at his dull customer to make the most inquiry.

"Razor's right, eh?"

"My good man," said the customer, "if his hadn't mentioned it I should never have known there was a razor on my face."

Willie—"Mamma, mamma, I wants you to come and play ball wiv Teddy and me."

Mother—"I can't little son. This washing will take me all the rest of the afternoon, and I'll be too tired to play to-day."

Anty Drudge—"My dear, if you had used Fels-Naptha soap in cold or lukewarm water to do this washing you would have been through long ago and would have felt fresh and bright enough to play with the children. Your clothes would have been cleaner and fresher, too. Just try it next washday, for your own sake and the children's."

There is nothing worse than hot water for making hands red and rough—unless it is common soap. Hot water and common soap make a combination bad for the skin.

Fels-Naptha soap helps to keep the hands nice. Fels-Naptha itself is healing to the skin. Then, with Fels-Naptha, you never have to put your hands into hot water.

Fels-Naptha soap washes clothes, washes dishes, and does all the cleaning about the house in cold or lukewarm water. No boiling, no steam; not even hot water.

Your hands are not made tender, and rough and red, but remain soft and smooth.

The work is done better, too, and in far less time than in the old-fashioned way with hot water. Why not have nice hands?

Follow the directions in the Fels-Naptha red and green wrapper.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

NOT FAIR TREATMENT

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

What do you think of a young man who is company, in attendance to every girl present, and alights the one to whom he has declared his love?

We have been keeping company several months, during which time he has continued this sort of thing right along. I have been most unhappy and have tried to conceal my feelings, realizing that he was at liberty to act as he pleased since we were not engaged.

However, I have, at last, felt that I could not be happy in all the time, and recently treated him coolly, trying hard to forget my love for him.

When he noticed this, he seemed to be doing a deep thinking, and reminded me of his love; but I was disappointed four days afterward at a party when he acted in the same way. J. B.

This young man is not treating you fairly. If he has declared his love for you, and you are willing to accept him you should become engaged at once and announce it.

Why should he expect you to submit to such actions? Tell him this affair must end unless he is willing to take the responsibility of becoming engaged to you.

DO NOT BE HASTY

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am eighteen years old and in love with a young man two years my senior. He is of good character and earns a good salary.

My parents object to him and they wish me to marry a very wealthy man for whom I have no affection and will never love. The other man has asked me to elope with him and I am writing to you to ask your advice. ANXIOUS.

Do not be discouraged. You love one another sincerely, and nothing can interfere ultimately with your happiness. You will be strengthened by the test your love must go through now. Do not spoil everything by running off, against the wishes of your mother and father. Such tearing a heavy weight on your conscience which will rob you of happiness.

In the first place, you have many things to do before marrying. Tell your parents you wish to wait two years before thinking of becoming a bride. In the meantime your friendship with this young man will be strengthened. You can follow some pursuit that you like. At the end of this period you can explain to your parents how you have waited for their consent. They will realize the sincerity of your love and feel that the happiness of your entire life depends upon their decision.

EXPLAIN TO HER.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am twenty and have been keeping company with a young girl of the same age for quite a number of years.

I have known her since we went to school, and our friendship has ripened into love.

I am ambitious, and, as it has always been my desire to become a physician, I have matriculated for the coming term.

My friend objects to me going up to college as that will postpone our marriage, and I am at a loss to know what to do.

Knowing that you will advise me wisely in this problem, I beg you to accommodate me with a reply. CONSTANT READER.

The young woman evidently does not realize the importance of the situation.

You must explain to her that, in order to her wishes, you are giving the girls of this for your whole career.

If the young woman truly loves you, she will understand and be willing to wait.

TO-DAY'S STOCK MARKETS; FINANCIAL NEWS

MARKET WEAK IN NEW YORK

NEW YORK, Aug. 23.—An irregular tone prevailed the stock market at the opening today. Canadian Pacific was the only stock showing strong upward activity. On strength it opened 1½ points higher. Canadian Pacific advanced 1¼ at the outset.

Trading was mainly professional and dealings were confined almost exclusively to the half dozen usual leaders. By the end of the first minutes trading, Atchison was down a half and Union Pacific, Reading common and Northern Pacific had lost from ¼ to ¾ each. Many of the features in trading came from reports that important railroad systems are going to extraordinary limits to make a public service record. The closing Congress was without effect. Steel opened with an advance of ¼, but selling orders carried it off again.

The curb market remained quiet and unchanged.

Americans held steady in London on professional operations. There was heavy selling there by Canadians.

Heaviness in cables and news of better weather served to check the rally in the cotton market to above one point higher to four points lower today. The best was quite timid, fearing continued support from the bull interests, but as the day faded the watermine pressure was exerted, carrying it here from one to two points under last night's close.

SOCIETY CIRCUS AT BETHLEHEM

BETHLEHEM, N. H., Aug. 23.—Thousands of Summer visitors saw the society circus and parade here, some coming fifty miles. The object of the affair was to raise money for the building of a new home for the Bethlehem Country Club.

The public schooner from the Hotel Bethlehem led the procession. Then followed twenty young men and women on horseback. A wagon load of chorus girls from the Sinouir followed, waving kisses, then came the brake of Scotch lads and lassies from the Highland House. The militant suffragettes couldn't be left out of the show, and Miss Mabelle Bliss, Mildred Rogers, Winifred Rogers, Mildred Marsh, Evelyn Morrow and Annie Wyzanski and H. Whitten rode in a decorated float from the Bethlehem Inn. Turner's Tavern sent into the parade its old Concord coach peopled with dames and gentlemen in gala array.

From Hillside Inn came an auto decorated in national colors, Mapleleaf and Japanese floral. The Algonquin, a golden-red float, followed by Mrs. D. Carey Smith's car similarly decorated; Central House, a Hallowe'en float; Pinehurst, ball dress; Miss Louise Davidson gave a great deal of amusement as a clown and Miss Lessig Miller as the Chinaware girl.

In the evening the guests assembled in Jackson Hall for the ball. The patronesses were Mrs. N. G. Burgess, Mrs. A. P. Rowe, Mrs. Roel W. Poor, Mrs. Fred Abbe, Mrs. Frank Abbott, Mrs. George Abbe, Mrs. Rufus N. Gordon, Mrs. W. Bates, Mrs. Howard Thompson, Mrs. Frank B. Turner, Mrs. Harry Lee, Mrs. Frederick L. White, Mrs. E. L. OH, JOY, NORMAN WHITE 'S IN VERSE

The latest thing in a campaign poem has made its appearance. It is from the pen of Miss Fanny Marie Cook, twelve years of age, of Brookline, and is entitled "We're nominating Mr. Norman White." Here it is:

We listen to the story we are telling,
A story of great joy and much delight,
Of Democrats of Massachusetts,
We're nominating Mr. Norman White.

CHORUS.

Of Governors we've had ups and downs,
And some are fine and some are shining lights,
But now we want one in the town of Brookline,
So we're nominating Mr. Norman White.

Now Norman White, the man that we've selected,
His praises we could sing forth day and night,
But first and foremost he's the man for Mayor,
Who is this man? This Mr Norman White?

Here it is:

He listen to the story we are telling,
A story of great joy and much delight,
Of Democrats of Massachusetts,
We're nominating Mr. Norman White.

$100,000 FUND TO HONOR MRS. RICHARDS

A fund of $100,000 is being raised by the American Home Economics Association to perpetuate the name of Ellen H. Richards, late professor of sanitary chemistry in the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. The fund is to be called the Ellen H. Richards fund, and the income is to further the work of the association of which she was an active member. Another fund of $40,000 is being raised by the friends of Mrs. Richards among the members of the M. I. T. Women's Association. This is to be called the Ellen H. Richards Research Fund.

HERE'S A BIG SNAKE STORY (CUT IN TWO)

WARE, Aug. 23.—One of the largest black snakes seen in this vicinity since the late one seen by James Owens and others of Gilbertville, was run over by a train on the Massachusetts Central railroad. It was cut in two.

When measured the two pieces stretched 7 feet and 3 inches, and the body in the largest part was eleven inches around. Examination showed that among the food which the snake had partaken of a young rabbit and a chipmunk.

HETTY GREEN FAILS TO ESCAPE TAXES

CHICAGO, Ill., Aug. 23.—Mrs. Hetty Green, America's richest woman, will have to pay taxes on full value of her Chicago holdings. The Board of Review has refused to grant her an abatement on several parcels of land, which she declared to be assessed. The assessors valued the property at $185,000. Mrs. Green said they were not worth a cent more than $140,000.

HUSBAND HAS NO TIME FOR AFFECTION

SOUTH NORWALK, Ct., Aug. 23.—Because her husband worked too much and loved too little, Mrs. Karl Dolge of Westport wants a divorce. Mrs. Dolge cites in her declaration that her husband has been guilty of cruelty towards her since he has devoted persistently to his business day and night, and has given her little if any time or attention. Dolge will not contest the libel as his wife does not seek alimony.

MAN WILL LIVE WITH DOZEN RIBS BROKEN

WORCESTER, Aug. 23.—The life of William McLaren, thirty, of No. 1 May street was saved by a cross bar which he gripped as he fell through the air from the top of the Mechanics building on his way to the pavement, fifty feet below. McLaren grabbed the cross bar, which was twenty feet from the ground, and there he still remained. All of the ribs on the left side were fractured, but physicians say he will recover.

PLAYMATE'S ARROW PIERCES LAD'S EYE

In a game which had William Tell's skill with bow and arrow as an inspiration, Angelo Desquadrino, thirteen years old, a pupil of the Parental School at West Roxbury, received injuries that may cost him the sight of his right eye. He stood with an apple on his head while William Barrett shot an arrow which struck him in the eye.

ORFORD, N. H., Aug. 23.—There is no material change in the condition of Justice James B. BIG ENTRY LIST AT OLD ORCHARD

By J. C. KERRISON.

The committee in charge of the Old Orchard Beach races, September 4, 5 and 6, is making a hustle and several of the best drivers in the country have been entered. Already the entries of Billings and Winkin in the Pope cars, Baldwin in the Stanley, Belcher in the Flat-Cyclone, Cobe in the Jackson and auntie Jackson with driver yet unnamed, and last, but not least, Jack Lowenburg in a Velie have been received.

It is hoped to equal if not break the world's record for speed on this course, which is two and a half miles in length. All starts will be standing, with the exception of the last mile to the mile against time which will be flying.

A section of the pier which extends out over the beach will be removed to give a clear course, and temporary garages are being built for the accomodation of the racers.

These races are being supported by the railroads, hotel men and business men generally, and the right enterprising township in their power to make Old Orchard the Ormond of the North.

With the foremost cars of the racing world held in leash awaiting the starting pistol, the greatest speed duel during drives at the wheel for the battle against time and each other, the 135 miles of the leading road races of the year, to be held by the American Automobile Association at Elgin next Saturday promises to be a thirty-five entries are in hand, and the offer of $7,000 in prize money promises a battle for honors second only to the Indianapolis 500 held last May.

The races on each day will start at 11 A. M. and continue until 5 o'clock, starting at 10:40 o'clock. On the first day, the 135 miles will be filled at 100 miles on the Kane County at 170 miles, and the second day at 125 miles, will be started about ten seconds apart, and since the shorter distance is allotted to the small racer cars, they will probably finish well to gether. On the second day the Elgin National, at 301 miles, will be run alone, and will be a long grind.

That the winner will be pushed to the limit of his speed can hardly be doubted when the line-up of drivers and cars is considered. With such drivers as Ralph Ford, Grant, De Palma, Ralph Wishort, Aitken, Merz, Wilcox, Jenkins, Knight, Pearce, Buck and Mulford, a prediction of seventy-five miles an hour does not seem far out of the way.

"Whenever I become mixed up in a road dispute with a policeman I do my best not to lose control of my feelings. I can not afford to do it if I am in the wrong, and if I am in the right there is no reason to lose my temper," says a veteran motorist. "If motorists will bear this in mind when they are touring they will find that self-possession is ten points of the law in a dispute."

Notes for Investors

The incubus of tariff revision has been lifted, but the legation of government prosecutions and congressional investigations still hangs nearly over the market.

$ $ $

Fervent prayers are being offered by the hope that legislation by Congress this Winter, amending the Sherman anti-trust law will be constructive and not destructive of business.

$ $ $

The weeks State street has looked forward to the adjournment of Congress as the starting point of an extensive rally in the market, but bankers say that the interval between the adjournment and the beginning of the public service work is not to be expected attacks on corporations will be resumed. It is so short that it would be illogical to expect any advance in prices from this cause.

$ $ $

What State street now looks forward to is a conflict of labor and capital, although the unions have not shown a disposition to be captious at all. It is estimated that in the last six months about 20 per cent. of the railroad labor of the country has been made life, but up to this time the advantages of upkeep and maintenance has not been curtailed in proportion. There has been some agitation among employees for higher wages and easier working conditions, but the management of the transportation lines have refused to regard it as serious. The fact that there may be trouble seems to be confined to State street.

$ $ $

Disbursements for dividends in September will approximate $2,000,000 less than last year, according to the declarations. September dividends made up to Aug. 15 accounted by the Wall Street Journal. Few declarations of September disbursements are made later than Aug. 15. While the stockholders pay roll has shrunk, according to this authority, the railroads will collect nearly $1,500,000 more than in the previous September. Corporation bonded interest payments scheduled for next month aggregate $34,000,000, a decrease falling far more than $3,000,000 and interest payments on notes of $8,500,000. The largest disbursement in any month this year was the $25,000,000 paid in July.

$ $ $

It is stated on good authority that the buying of Atchison is of very high quality. It is also said that Pennsylvania interests have obtained a line of the stock and are willing to take more declines. The "stockholders' list of the company is said to have increased greatly since the recession began. As a sure 6 per cent. dividend payer it is attractive.

$ $ $

It is understood that the Erie balance of $3,155,200 shown as available for dividends at the end of the last fiscal year was arrived at after appropriating approximately $1,000,000 for additions and betterments. The actual dividend balance of Erie in the year ended June 30 amounted to over $6,000,000, or more than $3 a share on 2d common.

$ $ $

The Baltimore & Ohio's returns for July, issued yesterday, are the first railroad earnings for the month to appear, and show the effect of retrenchment in an increase of net, but not in gross. Figures for the fiscal year ended June 30 showed that the operations of the Baltimore & Ohio system back to meet losses on business of the latter half of expenses.

$ $ $

The Pennsylvania Railroad company has issued the following statement: The report that the management of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company has issued an order to the heads of all departments to reduce forces wherever possible is absolutely untrue and without any foundation. On the contrary, in anticipation of an increase in business, the company is making the additional car repair men at Greenville, West Morrisville, Harrisburg, Enola, Bellwood, Pitcairn, Pittsburg, Southside and Altoona.

80 AND 82 SUMMER ST., BOSTON, AUGUST 23, 1911

President Taft Takes the Wrong Turning

The AMERICAN has always hoped and expected much from the mental sobriety of Mr. Taft. These anticipations have not been wholly disappointed. On the contrary it has seemed that up to the day of the signing of the Reciprocity resolution the President gained steadily upon the difficulties of his great task, and daily overcame some element of that powerful tendency toward legal formalism and political reaction which is a defect of his temperament.

But now in the face of the stubborn vetoes—actual or promised—from the White House, which have within the last week fallen like a withering blight upon the honest harvest of congressional labors, this newspaper is compelled reluctantly to admit that Mr. Taft's incapacity for leadership in an era of reform looms big.

Obviously Mr. Taft has arrived at the cross-roads of his career—and has taken the wrong turning.

Mr. Taft was elected President as a tariff-reform candidate on a tariff-reform platform and he did not fail to offer upon the platform ample and apparently sincere pledges of his personal devotion to the tariff-reform cause.

The friends of the President were disappointed when he signed the iniquitous Payne-Aldrich tariff bill—for this bill not only failed to reduce the tariff in accordance with the promises of the Republican platform and Mr. Taft's personal pledges, but in its total effect actually increased the tariff burden of the people.

In his speech at Winona, which was supposed to sound the depths of the President's conscience, he was constrained to admit the defects of the Payne-Aldrich revision and to confess that at least one schedule as it stood was grossly predatory and morally "indefensible."

Now comes a Democratic Congress—elected in obvious rebuke of the duplicity and public betrayal that had been wrought by the Republicans in the Payne-Aldrich bill—and this Congress, fresh from the people, lays upon the President's table certain mild and temperate measures of tariff reduction.

These measures—save for their excessive moderation—are the natural and inevitable response to the well-nigh unanimous demands of the American electorate.

Yet Mr. Taft has the obtuseness or hardihood to set his present will against the will of the people and of Congress and against his past promises, whereby he got his power.

He stands before the country forbidding the passage of the mildest measures for the easing of the strain of extortion in food and clothes.

He balks the Farmers' Free List, which is the reasonable complement of the Reciprocity bill. He stands unashamed as the defender, not only of the Cotton Schedule, but also of that monument of predacious taxation, the infamous and "indefensible" Schedule K.

Mr. Taft's excuse for condemning the people of the United States to an indefinite prolongation of their starvings and shiverings for the coddling of fatted trusts is, to well-informed men, not even a palliation.

He says we must wait for the report of the Tariff Board. But everybody knows, or should know, first, that no action is likely to be taken on the report of the Tariff Board on the eve of a presidential election, and that the Tariff Board as it stands is an incompetent guide to tariff reform, because of the narrow limitation of its powers, the partisan character of its composition and the small-bore calibre of its personnel.

The conclusion of the whole matter is that there stands in the front of American politics something besides Schedule K that is wholly and pitifully "indefensible."

It is the President himself.

LETTERS FROM AMERICAN READERS

MISSIONARIES IN TURKEY

Editor AMERICAN:

On the editorial page of your paper, and in a letter in the same issue written for the just cause of the Armenians, who have suffered to get sorts of cruelty and monstrosity for over a year and a half, I read a few lines to the effect that the American missionaries were trying to "Germanize" and Christianize the Mohammedans in Turkey. If you allow me the liberty, I will venture to deny it.

I, myself, am a Turkish subject and have been closely connected with an American missionary college in the past. Therefore, I don't think I shall be claiming too much, when I say that I am quite well acquainted with the character and the extent of work missionaries are doing there.

The bare and sad fact is that the missionaries have never dared to attempt to "sermonize" and "Christianize" the Mohammedans. Never at all. That would indeed be courageous of them. What they have done up to the present time consists mostly in the attempt to proselyte the already Christian subject races—Greeks, Armenians, Albanians, Bulgarians, etc. The only positive good the missionaries are doing is in the way of education through a few colleges and high schools. Even these institutes are not free from religious fanaticism and politically cunning and debasing influence.

THE BEARD QUESTION

Editor AMERICAN:

It is with much regret I note your editorial in which you state that a young man with a thick growth of beard has in all probability seen his limit of development. What poorer encouragement could be given the American youth than this? His chances for success would be few indeed if such an editorial were carried out and here Ilait.

Why not give him essentials of paramount importance and not hamper his present progressions with reference to his beard?

There are a hundred other things a young man should consider for future, more essential than his growth of hair, leaving the latter thought at the rock bottom of his career.

DOGS AND CHILDREN

Editor AMERICAN:

If a man with a family of four or five children tries to get a place to live in he will find children are just as unpopular as dogs, and a great many times it is the people who object to dogs that object to children. In the opinion of one who likes both children and dogs, when sensibly brought up, your editorial was silly and one-sided—which an editorial should never be. Child study has been taught to be good to dumb animals stands very little chance of ever being bitten; it is the child who is allowed to torment them that suffers. It should be appreciated by every one that the desire to retaliate is not a prerogative of a dumb animal. It is a very human trait.

URGES SATURDAY HALF HOLIDAY

Editor AMERICAN:

I most congratulate your paper on the effort on some important measures which have been acted upon by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts pertaining to the welfare of the State and toiling people.

There is another thing which ought to be looked into, the Saturday half-holiday. Why not make every Saturday after 12 o'clock noon a legal holiday? Men and women in factories would feel a lot better Monday morning if they had Saturday afternoon to breath fresh air and enjoy a little recreation.

DR. WILEY, SUFFRAGIST

Editor AMERICAN:

The men who stand up for the rights of the public against the forces of corruption are mostly believers in equal suffrage. Like Louis D. Brandeis, Dr. Harvey W. Wiley is an advocate of the ballot for women. For years he has declared his conviction that the passage and enforcement of pure food laws would be helped by woman suffrage.

The Charles River Basin

Mayor Fitzgerald and Mr. Filene Point Out Neglected Opportunities

Mayor Fitzgerald signalized his return to Boston by protesting against the policy which is making so little public use of the beautiful Charles River basin. He calls public attention to the varied opportunities for aquatic enjoyment afforded by similar stretches of water in Europe.

Mr. Fitzgerald's protest is sound and timely. Those in control of the development of that beautiful basin seemed to have forgotten that the rule of action for the public servant is the greatest good to the greatest number.

The whole community has paid the heavy expense of turning this water way from an unapproachable and unpicturesque back bay marsh into a useful and delightful piece of water, capable of filling every desire of the lover of beauty and of sport.

We live and labor in the pursuit of happiness. Our great forefathers declared, through the Declaration of Independence, that the pursuit of happiness was one of our three inalienable rights.

What makes life happier in Boston will make it a greater city, and in the trying heat of the Summer a city which has a splendid body of water in its very midst, not given over or necessary to commerce, and yet not put to the very best degree of usefulness, is committing a crime against the bounty of nature, and if the money of all the people has been spent to perfect nature's gift, it is not only a crime against nature but against the people themselves, not to devote it to the widest possible public uses.

Mr. Edward A. Filene, whose interest in the 1915 movement and the city planning is well known, agrees with Mayor Fitzgerald that the Charles River basin is not to-day giving the people of Boston all the advantages which it is capable of giving and ought to give.

Mr. Filene says that not only upon the principle of the greatest good to the greatest number, but upon the ground of common fairness, every means of adding to the happiness and the comfort of the people of Boston which can be found within a five-cent fare, ought to be devoted to those who must enjoy inexpensive pleasures or enjoy no pleasures at all.

The more fortunate citizens have the ability to seek their pleasures at a greater distance and their feelings should weigh but little in the scales against the interest of the great mass of the city.

Mr. Filene says that the basin should be teeming with motor boats and rowboats and bathhouses and every means of enjoyment on or by the water.

It is scarcely necessary to have any man's opinion on a matter where the public interests are so obvious, but if any man's opinion would be valuable it is the opinion of Mr. Filene.

We think that the residents of Back Bay whose homes adjoin the basin will even join in promoting the higher usefulness of the Charles River, if they are made to realize how much it means to their fellow citizens of lesser opportunities for the enjoyment of outdoor life.

He Writes About His Pa's Heartache

By WILLIAM F. KIRK

WEN Pa calm hoam last nite he was very late. This is the first time that Pa has been late for a long time, & Ma was surprised. Pa knew that Ma was going to be sur-prised wen he got neer the house, so wen he calm in he sed, O deer me. O deer me.

Ma was all reddy for to skold him, but wen she seen Pa holding his bed to think that my hero is nearly all in. That is why I stayed down town so late, Pa sed. & O deer, my poor bed! Jest wen Ma had Pa's bed all fixed up in a nice cold cloth with ice in it & everything & wen Pa was lying on the sofy taking a nap there came a ring at the dor. A man naimed Mister Jenkins calm in & sed to Ma, I want to have a nice visit with yure husband, wich I have met once or twice. I am vary sorry, sed Ma, but at present he has a bed bed ache & he is reclining on the sofy. Ma always says Pa is reclining; she nevver says he is lying, because she knows it.

Well, sed Mister Jenkins, if you will tell him who it is, I am sure that he will admit me. Tell him, sed Mister Jenkins, that I am a frend of Dave Fredericks & Billy Stevenson. He will surely remember Dave, sed Mister Jenkins. Dave is the fellow that I introduced to him, the man with the big fingers.

Well, sed Ma, what do you want to see my husband about?

I wanted to tell him about how bad all us fans feel that —— sed Mister Jenkins.

Then you mite as well go away, Ma sed, beekaus my husband is skredly in a state of nervus collaps about it. I dont follow baseball much, Ma sed, but I know that my husband talks this thing very much to hart, beekaus he is walking up verses in his delirium.

Then I guess I better go away, sed Mister Jenkins.

she felt sorry rite away & sed, O you poor boy, have you a bed ache?

Yes, sed Pa, I have a bed ache & what is worse I have a hart ache. A hart ache is always worse, Pa told Ma, beekaus most of the times that a man has a bed ache it is coming to him, but wen a man has a hart ache it is owing to circumstances, Pa sed, over wich he has no control.

Wen Pa toald about the hart ache Ma dident feel so sorry, beekaus I guess that most wimmen is like Ma after they git married, they are willing to be nice to thare husbands wen they have a bed ache, but they always look kind of funny wen thare husbands has hart aches. Hart aches is caused from so many different things.

Well, sed Ma, what about the hart ache?

The star Red Sox pitcher is going back, sed Pa. The king of them all is feeling the wate of age, the saim as I beegan to feel it a few years ago, & that is why I mourn, sed Pa.

How much did you have on the game, sed Ma. I never bet anything, sed Pa. It seem that, I only feel sad

EVERY man and woman who possesses a humane heart will read with feelings of shame and pity a story of incredible labor conditions to be told in next Sunday's AMERICAN by C. O'Connell Galvin, who, as this newspaper's special commissioner, has recently toured the cities of Great Britain and Ireland.

It is a story of industrial oppression, the details of which defy belief. It is a recital of "sweating" conditions of a character to disgrace civilization.

The facts in detail will all be told in next Sunday's AMERICAN.

Every union man and woman, every wage-earner, every honest business man who believes in the honest rights of labor will read this article with flaming cheeks from the first word to the last.
